INTRODUCTION

The primary object of this book is to make permanent a record that has required many years to assemble; and to provide a starting-point for those who may feel an urge to carry on the work in the future. Notwithstanding its size the book is but a beginning. The Cooley family not only is very large but is scattered throughout the United States and Canada. Years must elapse before any adequate history can be written of the comings and doings of early Cooley immigrants and their descendants.

This record began at my mother's knee when she told us children stories about early Cooleys—stories that had come down with the years. One was of a Cooley who fell in love with a Scotch lassie—a school teacher. Her parents objecting to their marriage, they ran away and came to America. Could this have been Benjamin and his wife Sarah? Possibly, but hardly likely in light of later discoveries. Another was of a Cooley who was a cattle-drover in the late Revolutionary War period, or just after. Returning East after a successful trip, with his saddlebags full of money and bright dreams of the future, he stopped overnight in Albany, and found in the morning that with all his money he could not pay for his night's lodging. Continental money had ceased to have any value.

It was not until twenty years or so later that the opportunity was afforded to investigate these stories. It then became evident that they were handed down by the Cooleys who migrated from Granville, Mass., to Canandaigua, N. Y., in 1790 or thereabouts. Mr. Daniel Cooley, a highly respected citizen of Granville, married Frances McIntyre, who had recently come to this country with her father, Major William McIntyre, a settler in nearby Feeding Hills. She was born in Donegal County in the north of Ireland, and no doubt descended from the MacIntyres of the Kintyre Peninsula in southwest Scotland, across the North Channel from Ireland. Their son John I, and grandson John II, settled in Canandaigua; and another son, Thomas, grandfather of Judge Thomas McIntyre Cooley, settled in Attica, N. Y. John I was the cattle-drover. When the study of the family history was taken up in the 1880's, Daniel was found to be of the fourth generation from the immigrant Benjamin who settled in Springfield, Mass., in the early 1640's.

There is still a thrill in the memory of those early years when, with nought to go on but the stories told us youngsters, the search after the facts began. After eighteen years on my father's farm in Canandaigua and eight years in the United States Navy, I found myself detailed in 1881 as "Professor of Steam Engineering and Iron Shipbuilding" at the University of Michigan. Judge Thomas McIntyre Cooley was then head of the University's law school, and a justice in Michigan's Supreme Court. Quite naturally I was interested in our probable relationship—much more so than was the Judge himself. After I had pestered him vainly for several years, his son Charles Horton Cooley, later Professor of Sociology, came to my rescue, and helped settle not only our relationship but many other family connections which he had discovered in the New England Historical and Genealogical Society's library in Boston. Meantime I had collected, during ten years or so, a large number of old family letters, and family records faded and dog-eared, venerable with age, many of them found in my grandfather's old hand-made deerskin roll, now in my possession and known as the "Lyman Cooley Deerskin Roll." So, in truth, this old deerskin roll may be said to be the basis of this family history.

Originally, and for thirty years, my idea was to collect facts relating to my particular line, with no thought of trying to cover the whole Cooley family. But in so doing, naturally much material came to light that had to do with other branches of the family; and more recently there has been added to my own the data of other members of the family gathered while establishing their own lines. Thus the record as a whole has become so large and so valuable as to quite outweigh my original idea of confining the book to my own, the so-called Daniel line; and hence the desire to include in it everything Cooley known, and discovered by others as well as myself.

That my efforts were pioneering in character may be judged from the fact that until Charles Cooley informed me of the New England Historical and Genealogical Society's library in Boston I knew of no practical way to secure data except from graveyards, family Bibles, and old residents. So after resigning from the Navy in 1885 I went to Massachusetts and spent a number of days in the old cemeteries of the several Granvilles there; and in searching the town records for possible clues. I brought back with me a notebook full of sketches of gravestones and their inscriptions; such items as I could find in old records; and stories told me by old residents. Some of the stories were legend, some were fact, as was later discovered. Some old town records, or rather remnants of them, were discovered in the J. M. Gibbons store in Granville Corners. Mr. Gibbons, then an old man, had at one time been town clerk. I visited the church in which Dr. Timothy Mather Cooley preached for sixty years, and brought back with me a bit of the old high pulpit which had been replaced by a more modern one.

On this trip I also visited Springfield, West Springfield and Westfield. In Springfield I stopped at the old Cooley Hotel near the railroad station; and its proprietor, Justin Morton Cooley, told me that Judge Henry Morris of Springfield used to tell of three Cooley brothers who came from England or Scotland. He could not remember their names, but their father's name was Martin. One settled in Granville, one in Franklin County, and the third not far from Springfield. Both Martin, and Justin himself, appear in the genealogy, also the Earl Cooley "who came to America, and who held the title of Earl in England."

Again in 1895 I went to Springfield, and on to Boston where I visited the New England Historical and Genealogical Society's library in order to enlarge upon the information brought to me by Charles Horton Cooley. I found Munsell's Index and copied from it all references to Cooleys in the books he mentioned. I bought copies of the Longmeadow Centennial, and of Burt's History of Springfield in two volumes. This was the basis of a genealogical library which, added to by books left me by my brother, Ernest L. Cooley, exceeds one hundred and fifty volumes. This library is now the property of my son, Capt. Hollis M. Cooley, U.S.N.

In 1896 I contacted our Despatch Agent in London, Mr. B. F. Stevens, who sent me a number of references to families in Rutlandshire, and extracted for me "Some Notice of the Family of Cowley of Kilkenny" by John G. Prim, published in the Proceedings of the Kilkenny Archaeological Society. (Incidentally, in the letter returned with his findings, he said he had incurred the expense of $15. I somehow overlooked this part of his letter, and apparently did nothing more on genealogical matters until 1914, when I re-read the letter, and wrote asking if I had ever paid that $15. Finding no record, B. F. Stevens & Brown, as the firm had become, wrote that the charge had been written off to a "suspense account." I sent them a London exchange for $41.61, being the principal of $15 plus interest compounded annually at 6% for 17½ years.)

In 1915 my brothers and sisters met in a reunion with Cooleys of the old home town of Canandaigua, and I took along with me the family tree which at that time was complete in my own line from the immigrant ancestor down to date. I explained it to those present, and two of my brothers, Lyman Edgar and Ernest Linwood, both engineers like myself, were especially interested. Lyman undertook to ferret out information pertaining to the McIntyres in Feeding Hills, Mass., and also information pertaining to land records in and about Canandaigua. Ernest, on the other hand, became interested in the origin of the family overseas. He became convinced that the Cooleys originally headed up in Normandy, and went to England at the time of the Norman Conquest. He prepared a map of Normandy on which he located places where the Cooleys (spelled C-u-i-l-l-e) lived. My brothers' interest was such that had they lived, we would now be in possession of long-sought information helping to round out the family history.

Another brother, Clarence E. Cooley, drove me all over Ontario County and other nearby counties in search of old graveyard records, and to give me an opportunity to talk with people who remembered earlier generations of the family. These old graveyards I found very helpful in establishing dates.

In 1926 Miss Vivien Bulloch, now Mrs. John W. Keatley, came to the University of Michigan from Texas. Being a stenographer she sought employment in order to pay her college expenses, and in 1927 she was assigned to the office of the Dean of the Engineering College for half-time work and became my personal secretary. She discovered my old genealogical records and at odd times arranged them in order. She had made some headway when after graduation she went back home to Texas in 1933. She took the records with her, and succeeded in arranging these, and the charts made

COMPILER'S PREFACE

For those to whom genealogy is an avocation and a hobby, no explanation concerning this book is necessary. For those to whom genealogy is a profession and science, an explanation as well as an apology is due. This work, despite its size, was never undertaken with the idea of bringing out a complete genealogy and history of the Cooley family. The intention with which I was originally concerned was simply to put into shape for distribution among members of the family the various and miscellaneous family records that had been accumulated over a period exceeding fifty years by Dean Mortimer E. Cooley and his two late brothers, Ernest L. and Lyman E. Cooley.

I felt that these fairly extensive records should not be lost in archives and individual lineages, but should be reproduced in some form which would make them available to all who were interested. As Dean Cooley's secretary I had spent some time in arranging his genealogical data, and the compilation of the records already accumulated did not seem to me to be an insurmountable task. I expected, with the inexperience of youth, to complete the task within a few months, and on that basis agreed to undertake it. But fortunately, perhaps, the material began to expand, through correspondence with members of the family who had been working out their own lines. I have not had much opportunity for personal research in original sources. In going through the records an idea for more data would appear, and some correspondent would make the necessary searches of records for me. The interest shown by members of the family has been ever-expansive and all-inclusive. Perhaps no individual member of the family is more familiar than I, an outsider, with the sterling qualities of friendliness, cooperation, confidence, and ability, of the Cooley family. For the interest and encouragement given me I am indeed most grateful and appreciative. Acknowledgment of individual contributions has been attempted at the end of the book, but no bare statement of fact could convey the amount of assistance I have had from the family.

It is of course unfortunate that no member of the family was available to devote the necessary time to the compilation of a Cooley genealogy. The next choice, a professional genealogist, would have been highly desirable; but funds for such work, in addition to the expense of searches already made and of the publication of the material, were not available. I had no qualifications other than a tremendous interest in the family, added to several years' experience as Dean Cooley's secretary. Even the inexpert handling I have given the records has, however, required a great deal of study and patience on my part, in the effort to find the most nearly satisfactory arrangement for a wide variety of material.

The arrangement of material on the descendants of Cooley daughters is the only innovation in form. It seemed desirable to me to give all information about the descendants of daughters of a Cooley head-of-family immediately after the head-of-family appeared. This seemed advisable because the amount and kind of material on daughters varied exceedingly; any other arrangement would have produced a spotty appearance of names other than Cooley as heads-of-families throughout the book in the various generations. The system used is simple, and has met with the approval of those to whom it was shown for comments. To divide the material into sections, comprising first Benjamin, then four sections of his descendants, and an appendix, presented itself as the most satisfactory arrangement. Individual authorities could not be cited for all the material in the book, since much of it was based upon research done by different people, many of whom failed to indicate sources; therefore it seemed wiser to indicate no sources at all in the text, as otherwise some of the material would seem to be less "authentic" than others. It is hoped that the lack of references to authorities is compensated for in the Bibliography, which I have prepared with considerable difficulty and which I believe includes most of the sources of the material in the genealogy.

It should be understood that the choice of accepting as authoritative the records included in this volume has been left to my own judgment. Dean Cooley, at whose expense I have compiled the records, has been engaged meanwhile upon work in Ann Arbor which demanded much of his time and strength. The records were shipped to me in California in 1936, and were largely compiled in my home there. Therefore while whatever merit the book may have is a result of research done by Dean Cooley and his brothers, and of members of the family with whom I have corresponded, the style, historical material, arrangement, and accuracy in copying the genealogical records, are my own responsibility. Thus the deficiencies which will undoubtedly be discovered, even by the uncritical, are to be laid at my door.

I should, however, like to express my appreciation for the assistance given me by Miss Berenice R. Tuttle, president of The Tuttle Publishing Company, Inc., in the publishing of the book. And while this is perhaps unusual, I should also like to acknowledge with admiration the work of two men known to me only as "Paul" and "Dick" on galley proof, who have painstakingly done what I consider an exceptionally fine job of type-setting.

It has been at my urgent insistence that this book is being published. Dean Cooley is a scholar, as well as an engineer. Had he undertaken the compilation of his records, he would have exhausted every possible effort to make the genealogy as complete and as authoritative as humanly practicable. But he was unable to give the time required, and the records were for many years simply stored in files, inaccessible because of lack of arrangement and indexing. I have been anxious that they be made generally available now. Within the past two years three members of the family, who contributed much research and were tremendously interested, have gone. All of them wanted to see a Cooley genealogy on library shelves and in Cooley homes. It is my belief that nothing but good can come from publishing the records as they now stand, and I have urged their publication. Dean Cooley agreed, but he was unwilling to see the records reproduced inexpensively; instead he has spared no expense to make as excellent a book as possible. It seems to me that his contribution in making these records available to the family must be understood and appreciated, however inadequately I have arranged them.

"It is the intention of this book to become the father of another." In the future, some other Cooley, perhaps after less than fifty years' devotion to the work, will arise to make it more nearly resemble Dean Cooley's dream—a complete genealogy and history of the Cooley family.

THE COOLEY FAMILY ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA

On the occasion of the Tercentenary Anniversary of the founding of Springfield, Mass., The Cooley Family Association of America was organized in Springfield on August fifteenth, 1936. The Association was founded to insure the completion and publication of The Cooley Genealogy, and the establishment of data regarding the family prior to immigration to America.

The Association is pledged to commemorate the founding and achievements of the family in America; to preserve the traditions, ideals and records of a family which helped to make this nation; and to foster a feeling of unity and relationship among Cooley descendants throughout America, by means of meetings and through bulletins reporting activities of the Association and of its members.

Mortimer Elwyn Cooley, first President and Life Member No. 1 of the Association, was its Founder and is its guiding spirit. To him we owe our never-ending gratitude, not only for his wisdom and guidance in organizing the Association, but particularly for his willingness to publish this genealogy. Back in the 1880's he developed an interest in his Cooley ancestry, and ever since then he has consistently and painstakingly collected and classified the material in this first edition, published by him.

It is his hope, and the hope of the Association, that the information contained in this volume will enable many Cooley descendants to enjoy tracing their families back to their origins. Also that through the wide distribution of this genealogy to descendants, libraries, historical societies and others, corrections and additions may be received and that at some later time the Association may publish an enlarged and corrected edition. There are a great many Cooley descendants in America, and with their cooperation a Cooley genealogy might be published which would be not only a lasting monument to our forebears, but also a valuable contribution to the field of American genealogy. To share in the building of such a permanent record of the Family is a privilege open to all descendants. Individually, the amount of research required might not be possible; through cooperation it should become not only possible, but an adventure. When accomplished, it should indeed be a genuine contribution to Americana.

Many chapters could be written on such phases of the family history as:

Cooley Pioneers—the first settlers in various towns and counties; achievements of Cooleys who settled new territories. The subject of the pioneers of any family is of interest to all students of American history, and ours is no exception.

Military and Naval Records of the Family—these have been extensive, and many members of the family have rendered distinguished service to our country, in peacetime as well as in all of our national wars.

Cooley Women—there exist many interesting records about the women of our family. We should have a full chapter telling of their experiences and accomplishments.

Cooley Homesteads—Colonial architecture and living conditions make a fascinating study, and it is sincerely hoped that interested Cooleys will undertake to discover the details, together with photographs, sketches or paintings, of the early homes of the family.

Professions—the study of the Cooleys in education, science, government, literature, the ministry and many other fields of importance and usefulness, opens up endless possibilities for research.

In other words, the Association needs some volunteer "hobbyists" who have the imagination to see the possibilities in the foregoing subjects, and the desire freely to contribute their talents to this extremely important part of every family history. If other subjects occur to anyone, we will be glad to have you write about them also.

The Association will act as a clearing house both for the collection and dissemination of all Cooley family material of whatever nature. It will insure its safe-keeping and its inclusion in future editions of the genealogy.

Besides the completion of the Cooley genealogy, the Association has another outstanding goal of accomplishment—one which can be reached only by the cooperation of our whole big family. It is the establishment of a permanent headquarters where original records having to do with the family may be housed. The original records of Mortimer Elwyn Cooley are now housed with the Michigan Historical Collections, in the Rackham Building, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor. They are in the custody of the Michigan Historical Collections, under an agreement which prohibits their withdrawal by any individual but provides for their withdrawal by The Cooley Family Association in the event of its securing permanent headquarters. One very logical place for our headquarters would be in Springfield or Longmeadow, Mass., where Benjamin Cooley, one of our earliest ancestors in America, settled early in the 1640's.

Additional data, or corrections to this first edition, should be sent to the Genealogist of the Association, who will promptly acknowledge them and see that they have proper attention. Information regarding the Association can be secured from the Secretary at any time.*

In conclusion I would like to add our sincere expression of praise to Mrs. Vivien Bulloch Keatley for her years of faithful devotion to the work of compiling the material for this book. Besides this she was a prominent factor in the founding of this Association, and was its genealogist for the first two years. From her wide experience in matters pertaining to genealogy the Association has profited greatly, and we are most grateful for all she has done for us.

To the members of our family everywhere, I send cordial greetings and good wishes from every member of The Cooley Family Association of America.

THE COOLEY FAMILY

CHAPTER I

COOLEY FAMILIES

EARLY REFERENCES TO THE NAME; FAMILIES IN NORMANDY, ENGLAND AND IRELAND; THE PURITAN IN HOLLAND; FAMILIES IN AMERICA

THAT THE COOLEY FAMILY NAME is one of great antiquity is unquestionable. The name, in one orthographic form or another, is said to have existed in England long before the Danish and Norman Conquests, and perhaps even before the Anglian, Saxon or Roman Conquests, since the most ancient seats of the family are said to have been in the Western Counties, least displaced by the Romans, Picts, Scots, Jutes, Angles, Saxons, Danes, Normans and other invaders. One opinion holds that the Cooley family was one of those of the Angles migrating from North Germany to England during the 5th and 6th centuries, perhaps at about the time of the founding of the Anglian kingdom of Mercia and the old "Saxon Heptarchy," about 586.*

*In The History of Ireland, by William Dolby (1845), page 43, appears a description of the invasion of Ireland by the sons of Milesius, of Phoenicia and Spain, credited to the year Anno Mundi 2735 (1265 B. C.): "These were the sons of Milesius: Donn and Aireach, born in Phoenicia; Heberfionn and Amhergin, born in Egypt; and Ir, Colpa, Aranann, and Heremon, born in Spain. The sons of Breogan, grandfather to these princes, who attended this expedition, were Breagha, who gave the name of Magh-Breagha to his settlement in Meath; Cuala, from whom Sliabh Cuala; Cualgne [Cooley] gave name to Sliabh Cualgne [Cooley], in the county of Down..."

In Dolby a lineage from Noah, through his son Japhet, is given, which makes Breogan, A. M. 2597, the 25th genera-

One of the earliest references to the name is spelled Cualnge, and appears in the 7th century when the great Celtic epic, Tain Bo Cualnge, or The Cattle-raid of Cooley (County Louth), was first committed to writing. The name Cualnge may, of course, have been a place-name, not a patronymic; but many family names are derived from place-names. This great epic is described most completely in the Encyclopaedia Britannica. It is the chief and lengthiest romance of the Ulster cycle of literature, and has to do with heroes whom Irish annalists and synchronists agree in placing about the beginning of the Christian era. During this primitive Celtic civilization no native coins were in circulation. The land in a pastoral country belonged to the tribe. A man's property consisted of cattle, and cattle-raids were frequent. Hence the greatest Irish epic is of a cattle-raid, the object being for Queen Medb to gain possession of an extraordinary animal known as the Brown Bull of Cualnge.

One must not forget that the etymological method of deriving family names is full of pitfalls for the unwary. This dictum applies to names derived from Anglo-Saxon, as well as from the Gothic dialects, old French, Latin, and especially Celtic, since the Celtic is a more ductile language than, for instance, Anglo-Saxon. With the Celtic alphabet of only 18 letters and a series of inflections which may or may not appear tion from Noah! One of the sons of Breogan was Bille, who succeeded his father; another was Cualgne (sp. also Cualnge), or Cooley.

"The descendants of these princes in Spain assumed the name of Clana Breoguin, hence the Brigantes. Bille's son Gollamh [called Mile-Espaine, from whom the Irish are called Clana Mile, hence Milesians] with his father's permission sailed A. M. 2650 to Syria with a large number of his followers to help his Phoenician ancestors in their continental wars."

This recalls the lineage of Queen Elizabeth from Adam.

in the text, a "celtomania" can prove almost any word or name to be of Celtic origin. The Ogam inscriptions, more primitive than the nearly-contemporary Runic inscription on the Thorsbjerg Shieldbuckle of the 4th or 5th century, are found to be made by strokes or notches scored on either side of the edge of an upright stone. The Roman cursive alphabet of the 5th century was introduced by St. Patrick, and the authentic history of Ireland, written first in Latin by the churchmen, may be said to date from this period. There are few if any authoritative Celtic manuscripts earlier than the 8th or 9th century, and the great bulk of Irish literature appears in the manuscripts of the Middle Irish period (1100-1550).

The earlier Irish traditions were highly colored by the fili who acted as story-tellers, as judges, and as poets; later, the family bards assumed these functions. When the annalists came they had the choice of many versions. They could not sift folklore from history at a time when Faith and Fable walked hand in hand. As late as 1187, Geraldus Cambrensis (Gerald Barry) of Wales wrote a description and history of Ireland peppered with fabulous and impossible events, some of which he witnessed and all of which he believed. Barring the credulity of the times, his account gives a fair value to the civilization of the time — the period of the Crusades. Much of the fabulous material is traditional, and some of it is from Pliny and other classics. Barry was "an elegant scholar, deeply read in classical and medieval literature," and was graduated at the "university" in Paris "where he rose to great honors." He was, of course, a Latin churchman, and was "one of the most agreeable writers of the Middle Ages." At all events, material relating to a family or place-name in Great Britain prior, say, to the Norman Conquest, is of necessity largely conjecture, and must be so regarded.

In Domesday Book, which contains the returns of the census of 1085 taken by William the Norman, embracing 54,813 landowners in Great Britain, the name which probably is that from which Cowley-Cooley derived is spelled Culege. It was pronounced Cooley, the "g" being silent as in Burleigh. Some time following the introduction of "w" and "y" into the language, the English name underwent various orthographic metamorphoses. Although the orthography of the name has been modernized, the ancient pronunciation is still retained in England, as it is with Cowper, Cowley, etc. In the United States, a distinction in pronunciation is frequently made to distinguish between "Cowley" and "Cooley." By substituting the soft for the silent "g," Culege probably was also the parent-name of Coolidge.

There are almost countless variations in the spelling of the name. Among those noted in early records are the following: Calley, Cawley, Cayley, Colle, Colley, Collie, Colly, Coley, Coole, Coolee, Cooley, Cooleye, Coolie, Cooly, Coolye, Couele, Coueley, Coueleye, Coule, Couley, Coulye, Cowles, Cowle, Cowlay, Cowley, Cowly, Cowlye, Cualgne, Cualnge, Cuilly, Cuily, Culai, Cule, Culege, Culley, Quillie, Quilly and Quilley. Of this not exhaustive list, the surviving spelling with which we are chiefly concerned is that of Cooley, the spelling adopted by BENJAMIN COOLEY of Springfield, Mass., circa 1640, and used by his descendants.

THE FAMILY IN NORMANDY

Cuily:* from Cuily or Quilly, near Falaise, in Normandy, which formed part of the possessions of the Burdetts.

Robert Bordet, Lord of Cuily, came to England with the Conqueror, but was dead before 1086, when his widow held from Hugh de Grentemesnil in Lincolnshire (Dom. i 232 b.). His son, Hugh, had issue: 1, Robert de Cuilly; and 2, Walter de Cuilly. The elder son, Sire de Cuilly, married Sibylla, daughter of William de Chievre, a baron of Devon; and on undertaking to rebuild the city of Tarragona in Spain, and to defend it against the Saracens, obtained the suzerainty, with the title of Prince of Tarragona. He, in 1133, at the head of his Norman chivalry, rescued Alfonso King of Arragon and his army from destruction by the Saracens at the battle of Fraga. William, Sire d'Aguillon, his son, one of the barons in Normandy 1165 (Feod. Norm.), lost the principality of Tarragona in consequence of the accidental death of the Archbishop, which was attributed to him. He appears to have been succeeded by Manasser d'Aguillon, his brother, ancestor of the De Cuilys of Normandy.

Hugh de Grandmesnil (as spelled in the Bohn translation of Ordericus Vitalis), or Hugh de Grentemesnil (according to the Duchess of Cleveland), was one of the founders of the Abbey of Ouche, known as that of St. Evroult, about 25 miles E.N.E. of Falaise in Normandy. He granted to this abbey "for the good of his soul," the benefices of many of his lands in Quilli. He was an overlord in Normandy, as well as in Leicester. He was a "brave Souldier," and fought stoutly at the Battle of Hastings, and "was that day in great peril: his horse ran away with him, so that he was near falling, for in leaping over a bush the bridle rein broke, and the horse plunged forward. The English seeing him ran to meet him with their hatchets raised, but the horse took fright, and turning quickly round brought him safe back again" (Wace, quoted in Battle Abbey Roll, Vol. II, page 305). Two years after the battle he was appointed, with others, one of the Justiciars of England during the King's Absence in Normandy. He was Viscount of Leicester and Hampshire, and according to Domesday Book, held one hundred and four Lordships, of which two-thirds, with the Honor of Hinckley — in right whereof he was Lord High Steward of England — were in Leicestershire. He lived to be a very old man, and in 1094, "being grown aged and infirm, he took upon him the habit of a Monk; and within six days afterwards departed this life, whereupon Bernard and David, two Monks of St. Ebrulfe's (the Norman monastery, St. Evroult's, which he had restored and endowed), having seasoned his Corps with Salt, and wrapped it in an Hide, conveyed it to Normandy, where it was honourably buried on the South side of their Chapter-house" (Dugdale, quoted in Battle Abbey Roll, Vol. II, page 306).

About ten miles N. E. of Falaise there was a place called "Grand Menil," also called "Grandmesnil," or Great Manor, which may well have been the original home of Hugh de Grentmesnil, and which was very near that of the lesser baron, Robert Bordet, Lord of Cuily.

Various maps of Normandy show the home of the Cuillys, and places in Normandy bearing their name. Some of these maps are as follows:

2 Atlas de Geographie, by De Lisle and Buache, 1700-1763, contains a map of Normandy with fields, forests, mountains, roads, monasteries and hamlets, all pictured in detail. This Atlas can be found in the Congressional Library, Washington, D. C. A photographic reproduction of this particular section, showing Cuilly and Cuily place-names, was taken by the Military Intelligence Division, General Staff, U.S.A., Washington, and is in the possession of Mortimer E. Cooley of Ann Arbor, Mich.

3 Rambles through Normandy in 1854 contains (pages 395-396) a description of Normandy, and on page 403 states that among the barons who went to England with William the Conqueror in 1066 were "Courcy, Cinglais, D'Ouilly, de Gouvix, and Tournebu (ancestor of the Turnbills), all from the district of Falaise," where William the Conqueror was born. Falaise (cliff) is in the hill country; the name Cuilly (Cooley) means a ravine or valley with steep sloping sides, in contra-distinction to a canon with precipitous sides. The name de Cuilly is a place-name. Barons were called to military service by place-names during the Middle Ages.

COOLEYS IN ENGLAND

WALTER DE CUILLY³, s. of Hugh², grandson of Robert Bordet, Lord of Cuily¹, of Normandy and later of England, was a brother of Robert³, Sire de Cuilly and first Prince of Tarragona. Walter de Cuilly³ witnessed the foundation charter of Canwell, Stafford, in 1142. In 1247, Hugh de Cuilly paid a fine in Warwick. William de Quilly (13th century) held lands in Stafford from Marmion, and also held Ratcliff-Culey, Leicester, from Marmion. Hugh de Culey was Lord of Ratcliffe 1296-99. In 1309 he was Constable of Kenilworth; "and being taken prisoner with the Earl of Lancaster at the battle of Boroughbridge, died of his wounds in Pontefract Castle." The Cuilys continued at Ratcliffe Cuily from the reign of Henry II to that of Richard II.

Their coats of arms (Sable, a chevron between three mullets Argent pierced of the field) is still blazoned in one of the north windows of the church chancel; and in another opposite is the effigy of a man in armour, kneeling, and bearing on his arms an escutcheon Cuily, which is repeated on his surcoat. Another similar figure bears the coat differenced. (Battle Abbey Roll, Vol. I, pages 276-277).

Hugh de Culey¹, Lord of Ratcliffe 1296-99, was probably related to the de Cuilly family of Normandy, but the relationship is not known. He had issue, John Culey², who had two sons, Thomas³ (whose daughter and heir married Sir John Stanhope of Rampton) and Richard Culey³ who was living in 1361.

Richard Culey³ had issue, John Cully⁴ of Lubbenham, Leicester, who married a daughter of Sir John Harrington. John Cully⁴ of Lubbenham had issue, William Colley⁵, of Glaston, County Rutland; William Colley had John Colley⁶, who had issue, Anthony, Walter, and Robert Colley⁷. Anthony Colley⁷ was ancestor of all the Colleys, Lords of Glaston, Rutland, said now to be extinct. (The Norman People) His brothers, Walter and Robert Colley⁶, are said to have gone to Ireland in the time of Henry VII (Burke) or Henry VIII (Lodge), and from Walter Colley⁷ descended the Lords of Castle-Carberry, the lineal male ancestors of Arthur Wellesley, Duke of Wellington, whose lineage is given in Chapter II, devoted to Cooley coats-of-arms. The Honfroi de Culai entered on the Dives Roll as the companion of the Conqueror, and a sub-tenant in Domesday, does not appear in this pedigree.

Both Nichols and Dugdale give the descendants of this family somewhat differently from the above. Sir Hugh de Cuily, the Constable of Kenilworth under Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, who, according to Dugdale, "was one of those who had a hand in the murder of Piers de Gaveston," held the manor of Dunton in Warwickshire. "It seems that he made his residence there in these times, for in 8 Ed. II. he served as a knight for this shire in the several parliaments then held at Westminster and York; and was a knight before his death, which hapned at Pomfret (sic) Castle in 16 Ed. II. To which Hugh succeeded Roger, who, adhering to his Father in that Rebellion with the Earl of Lancaster, became also a Prisoner at Pomfret, but paying C marks* fine and giving security for future good behaviour, he was enlarged." Thomas, the last heir, was Roger's son, and had two younger brothers, Sir John and Hugh (there is no mention of Richard in Nichols' Leicestershire), who married two Irish co-heiresses, the daughters of Oliver de Mandeville. Thomas and Hugh each had a son, and Sir

*A mark was $\frac{2}{3}$ of a pound (8 oz. Troy weight) of silver, the value of which in 1322 was about £20 modern money; 100 marks—£2000 sterling. — E. L. Cooley.

John had two, but all of them died sine prole, and the daughter of the eldest brother, Elizabeth de Cuily, remained sole heiress. She was the wife of Sir John Stanhope of Rampton in Nottinghamshire; and Sir Richard Stanhope sold Dunton in 1422. One of their Warwickshire manors is called Merston Culey to this day" (Battle Abbey Roll, Vol. I, page 277).

The foregoing lineages conflict. According to The Norman People, the John Cully of Lubbenham, Leicestershire, was the ancestor of a grandson, John Cooley, who had Anthony, Walter and Robert; Anthony became the ancestor of the Rutland Colley family, and Walter and Robert went to Ireland, where Walter became the ancestor of the Lords of Castle-Carberry, the family to which the Duke of Wellington belonged. According to Nichols and Dugdale, the lineage not only varies in the ancestry of John, but became extinct with the children of John and his brothers, Thomas and Hugh.

The following lineage, starting with John Colly of Lubenham, Leicester, is taken from the 1618-19 Visitation of Rutlandshire, and makes no mention of Walter and Robert, brothers of Anthony⁴, given in The Norman People.

ARMS: Quarterly 1. Argent, a cross wavy sable. 2. Barry undee of six argent and sable on a canton gule, a crescent or. [The second quarter is taken from the Kebell heiress, acquired by heirs of Anthony Colley⁶, below.]

CREST: A griffin segreant argent, armed or.

*John Colly*¹, of Lubbenham, Co. Leicester; m. a sister of Sir John Harrington, Kt.

*William Colly*², of Glaston, Rutland; m. Anne.

*John Colly*³, of Glaston; m. Isabell, da. William Palmer, of Carlton, Northampton.

*Anthony Colly*⁴ [in this lineage no mention is made of Walter and Robert, said in The Norman People to be sons of John Colly³], of Glaston, Rutland; m. (1) Catherin, da. Sir John Skeffington of Skeffington, Leicester, Kent; m. (2) Julian, da. Cuthbert Richardson of Co. York. The children by first wife: Margery, wife John Flower of Whitwall, Co. Rutland; Dorothy, wife John Cartnell; and Mary; by second wife, —, wife Anthony Andrews of Pisbrooke in Rutland; —, wife Miles Forest of Peterborough; and Mary, wife Edward Forest of Middleham Park, Co. York. *Mary Colly*⁵, heiress, wife of Edward Forest. Children: Anne, wife John Withers of London; Anthony Colly of Glaston; John Colly of Glaston, d.s.p., m. Bridgett, da. and co-heire of Cuthbert Buercotts of Buercotts, Co. Nottingham.

*Anthony Colly*⁶, of Glaston, co. Rutland; m. Elizabeth, da. and heire of Henry Keble of Humberston in Co. Leicester; and had Anthony Colly; Elizabeth, wife Richard King of Ashley, Co. Lincoln; Jane; and Anne, wife John King of Somonby, Co. Lincoln.

*Anthony Colly*⁷ [adding Keble arms of his mother], m. Anne, da. William Turpin of Knaptofte in Co. Leicester, and had William, 2 years old in 1618; Anne; Elizabeth, wife Sander-son of Moulton in Co. Northampton [from a later Visitation]; Jane, and Frances [Harleian Soc.].

References to this Rutlandshire family are found in Wright's History and Antiquities of Rutlandshire. Since the Visitation provides no dates, these references are helpful in determining the approximate dates of individuals in the foregoing lineages.

1508, Johannes (John) Colly was Sheriff of Rutlandshire.

13 Henry VIII (1521/2), John Colley, deceased, held the manor and advowson of Glaiston of Edward, Duke of Buckingham, and as of his castle of Okenham by Knight's service.

15 Henry VIII (1523/4), Anthony Colly was his son and heir.

1632, Anthony Colly was listed as a milles [knight].

1640, Sir Anthony Colly, Knight, then Lord of the Manor of Glaiston, together with his son and heir apparent [not named], transferred land and advowson in Glaiston to Edward Andrews of Bisbroke [Pisbrooke, probably].

It is naturally impossible to evaluate the various and conflicting evidences of descendants of these first known Cooleys in England. The lineages of the Duke of Wellington start with a Walter Cowley in Ireland from England; although it is quite generally assumed that this Walter Cowley emigrated to Ireland from Rutlandshire, 1485-1509, or 1509-1547, there is evidence to the contrary, as given in that portion of this chapter dealing with the family in Ireland.

COOLEY WILLS

The records of the Prerogative Court of the Archbishop of Canterbury embrace wills in every part of England and Wales from 1383 to 1858 in unbroken sequence. The records of some of the Local Courts are housed in Somerset House, London. All of these records were searched for the years 1605-1649, inclusive, and other miscellaneous years, by a London firm, Hardy & Page, employed in 1915 by Mortimer E. Cooley, in an attempt to locate reference to Benjamin Cooley, in Springfield, Mass., circa 1640. In 1938/9, Anthony R. Wagner, Esq., Portcullus, College of Arms, London, supplemented these researches by a search of the wills of the Archdeaconry Court of St. Albans, the parish given by Col. *This will states no relationship to Abraham Cowley the poet, who lived 1618-1687. It is altogether possible that the poet was related to the St. Albans family, however. Abraham Cowley was a royalist; strongly influenced by reading Spenser he produced a volume of poems in 1637, four years before he entered Cambridge, where he was a distinguished scholar.
His royalist sympathies lost him his Cambridge fellowship in 1643, and he spent 12 years in the service of exiled royalty.
He was tremendously popular in his own day. For information, see his Biography by A. H. Netherot (1931). Hannah Cowley, another English poet, 1743-1809, achieved reputation under the pseudonym Anna Matilda.

TOPOGRAPHICAL LIST OF COOLEYS IN ENGLAND

The following is an attempt to make up a topographical list of all references to Cooleys in England at the time most interesting to American descendants of Benjamin Cooley; i.e., 1600-1650. Some earlier and some later references are also included. The list is, of course, far from exhaustive. The sources of the references are indicated.

Berkshire. Margaret Colly, widow, Wantage, 1612 (Wills).

Buckinghamshire. Subsidy Rolls, 1620. George Cowley, Buckingham; George Cowley, Leekhamstead; George Cowley, Tingwick; Frances Cowley, Ivinghoe; Richard Cowley, Stukeley (Banks). Thomas Colly of Wotton, Underwood, 1649 (Wills).

Cornwall. 1601, two families by name of Colly, 32 by name Coolen (Hitching).

Derbyshire. 1601, four families by name Cowley (Hitching).

Essex. Chelmsford Parish; see Parish Registers below.

Colchester: William Coole, Margaret, William Jr., Annis, Stephen Cole (Banks), John Coole, 1545; Littelbury: John Cooll, 1541; Nicholas Coole, 1567; Sampford, Magna (Wills), 1585-1619, Stephen Coole, John Colle, Elizabeth Colle, Samuel Coole (1634/5) (Wills).

Essex & Herts. Commissary of London: 1610, Richard Colly, Ware; 1631/32, Robert Colly, Standsted; 1634/5, Samuel Coole of Colchester (Wills).

Gloucestershire. Subsidy Rolls: Shinbridge, William Cowley; Estington & Alkerton, Ansel Cowley (Banks).

Herefordshire. Thomas Colly, 1623, William Colley, 1636 (Wills).

Hertfordshire. In the Col. Charles E. Banks mss., on which his topographical dictionary (1937) was based, this statement appears: "St. Albans Parish, Benjamin Cowley (Cooley) who settled in Springfield. Memorandum: Only County where Cooley is found; perhaps in St. Peters (St. Albans)." This statement accounts for the very thorough search of St. Albans records, given above under Wills, and below under Parish Registers.

Huntingdonshire. Lay Subsidy Rolls, St. Neots, Toseland Hundred, Thomas Cooley (Banks).

Kent. 1601, four families by name Coley (Hitching).

Lancashire. 1601, three families by name Cowley (Hitching).

Leicestershire. See the notes on the family in Leicestershire, mentioned at the beginning of The Family in England. 1601, two families by name Cowley (Hitching). Nicholas Cowley, 1481/2, of Leicestershire. See Northamptonshire, below.

Lincolnshire. William Colly, 1610 (Wills).

London & Middlesex.

The name Cowley appears in Middlesex as a place-name (Johnson, and Banks).

Walter Cowley, b. Staffordshire, had Ann, Samuel, Robert, Judith, and Catherine; resided in London in 16th century (Wills).

- Walter Cowley res. London in 17th century (Banks mss., London Householders 1638).
- James Cowley had a son, John, b. 1656 (Banks Mss.).
- Thomas Cooley married Rebecca Barton in 1620 (Banks mss., London Marriages 1605-1626).
- John Cooly, Mr. Cooley, Thomas Cooley, and Widow Cowley, householders in 1638 (Banks mss., London Householders 1638).
- Basingstoke: Richard Collie, 1619 (Wills).
- Robert Cooly, from Hadley in Suffolk; 1638 (Wills).
- Stepney, 1640. Edward and Hugh Cowley lived in Stepney (Banks).
- Northamptonshire.* Nicholaus Cowley, 1481/2 in Leicester, "owned the manor together with the advowson of the church of Yelvertoft, the manor of Slyford in Northamptonshire, and messuages, mills, and lands, at Swinford Stamisworth and Catthrop in the Co. Leicester" (Calendar Inquisitiones, Post Mortem, Vol. IV).
- Oxfordshire.* The name Cowley appears as a place-name (Banks). Alexander de Coueley was here in the 13th cy., as was Roger de Couele (1273) (The Norman People).
- Rutlandshire:* Crozier says that Benjamin Cooley of Springfield, Mass., came from Rutland. See the notes on the family in Rutlandshire at the beginning of The Family in England, above.
- Shropshire.* Crozier, in his work on arms of American families, assigned arms to Benjamin Cooley of Springfield, whose original home was given as Co. Rutland. These arms were checked (1937) by the College of Arms, London, and were found to have been granted in 1597 to Robert Cowley, "grandson of John Cowley, gentleman, descendant of a younger house of that auncient familie," of Shropshire. No other references to Cooley names in Shropshire have been found. The relationship of Benjamin Cooley to Robert or John Cowley of Shropshire is not known (Crozier; and College of Arms).
- Somersetshire.* 1601, 18 families by name of Coolle (Hitching).
- Staffordshire.* 1601, 16 families by name of Collie (Hitching). Francis Colly, vicar of Bushbury, 1626 (Wills).
- 16th century: John Cowley had sons Walter and Edward; Walter went to London (The Norman People).
- Suffolk.* 1638. Hadley: Robert Colly was from there; d. 1638 (Wills).

Surrey Co. Subsidy Rolls, 1620-1628; S. Olaves Parish, Widdow Cooly (Banks).

Wiltshire. Subsidy Rolls, 1605-1628; Walter Cowley, Widow Cowley (Banks). In 1601 there were 12 families by name of Coule (Hitching).

PARISH REGISTERS

After a study of the Prerogative and Local Courts, etc., has yielded localities likely to warrant further research, it is customary to have local parish registers studied. Since too many parish searches were indicated, a thorough search was impossible. Only two Parish Registers have been searched. The first, Chelmsford Parish, Springfield, Co. Essex, was searched because it was from this Parish that William Pyncheon of Springfield came, and it was thought that Benjamin Cooley's original home may have been in the same place. This search proved fruitless. In the 1937 Topographical Dictionary, by Col. Banks, the statement is made that Benjamin Cooley of Springfield, Mass., came from St. Albans Parish, co. Hertford. Thus in 1938 a detailed search of all parish registers of St. Albans Parish was made by Anthony R. Wagner, Esq., Portcullis, College of Arms. While this search did not yield the much-wanted evidence of Benjamin Cooley's birth, parentage and marriage, it does indicate the basis for Col. Banks' statement that Benjamin Cooley came from St. Albans Parish, for the records are full of Cooleys at the time covered.

COOLEYS IN IRELAND

Walter Cowley, an English gentleman, was sent into Ireland during the reign of Henry VII (1485-1509) to watch the conduct of Gerald, 8th Earl of Kildare, then Lord Deputy of Ireland (Burke; see the lineage of the Duke of Wellington given in Chapter II). According to Lodge, the Cowley, Cooley or Colley family in Ireland derives its origin from the County of Rutland, whence they removed into Ireland in the reign of Henry VIII (1509-1547), in whose 22nd year (1531)

His Majesty granted to Walter and Robert Cowley of Kilkenny, Gents., during their respective lives, the office of Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. According to Lodge, the 7th in descent from this Walter Cowley assumed the title of Earl of Mornington on Oct. 5, 1747, and was the father of Arthur Wellesley, Duke of Wellington; according to Burke, the Cowley who assumed the title of Earl of Mornington was 10th in descent from this Walter Cowley.

At any rate, Walter Cowley resided at Drogheda, where he acquired property, and left a son, Robert Cowley. By Royal Patent dated July 2, 1619, Sir William Colley got his lands created into the manor of Edenderry, otherwise Cowleystown, King's Co. This grant was further confirmed on the 8th of June, 1635.

A little known paper on the Cowley family of Kilkenny, by John G. Prim, was published in the Proceedings of the Kilkenny Archeological Society. Prim holds a most contradictory opinion towards the beginning of the family in Ireland, and presents evidence that the Cowley family in Ireland either came from England much earlier than is generally supposed, or was originally an Irish family.

Prim cites references to Cowleys in Ireland, and probably in Kilkenny, at least 70 years before the earliest date given for the removal of Walter and Robert Cowley from England (Burke, after 1485; Lodge, after 1509). In 1407 Walter Cowley was one of two portreeves of Kilkenny. In 1425, John Cowle was ordered to take army provisions to James Butler, Earl of Ormonde. In 1496 (12 Henry VII) John Cowley was granted the office of gauger in Ireland during the Royal Pleasure. In 1505, Robert Cowley was appointed customer (keeper of the customs) of the Port of Dublin, and still held that office in 1520. This Robert Cowley appears to be the same one, of Kilkenny, who was appointed Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, the date of the appointment being given by Lodge as the 22nd year of the reign of Henry VIII (1530-31), and according to Prim the 26th year of the reign of Henry VIII (1534/35).

In the reign of Henry VIII, the time given by Lodge for the removal of the Cowley brothers from Rutlandshire, government officials speak of Walter Cowley as an "Irishman, and a worthy example to the other natives," so he could hardly have been a newcomer to Ireland at this time. The 1425 order appointing John Cowle to take up provisions for the use of James Butler, Earl of Ormonde, and his army, was dated (the 11th of May) at Drogheda, thus pointing to a residence of Cowleys at that place long before the earliest date given for the removal of members of the family from co. Rutland to Ireland.

The Cowleys of Kilkenny seem to have been fairly well-to-do. They disappeared from public view about 1650. The last-mentioned of them was appointed to conduct negotiations with Oliver Cromwell (1653?-1658).

Prim's exhaustive work upon the Cowleys of Kilkenny points to possible inaccuracy in other authorities, who indicate unanimously that Walter and Robert Cowley of Ireland removed there from Rutlandshire, England, between 1485 and 1547. Dugdale lends some evidence that Prim's conclusion is correct; i.e., that the family did not come from Rutlandshire to Ireland. For Dugdale indicates that the Rutlandshire line early became extinct, and fails to include Walter and Robert Cowley in his records of the Colley family of Rutlandshire, as does the 1618/19 Visitation.

In his study, Prim indicates no knowledge of any migration by the Irish family to New England.

Mr. Joseph Carvill, an Irishman from North Ireland, reported to Hollis Moseley Cooley in 1920 that a famous golf course known as "Cooley Point" is located near Greenore, Ireland, in the vicinity of Carlingford Lough which lies between Belfast and Dublin. Near Cooley Point is the "Townland of Cooley." In Ireland the name is spelled and pronounced the same as in the United States; i.e., C-o-o-l-e-y.

THE PURITAN IN HOLLAND

In seeking English ancestry for early immigrants to America, one likely source is often overlooked; hence we call to attention that many of the very early American settlers came to America by way of Holland.

Surprise is occasionally expressed that the attempt at self-government, which in England under the Commonwealth failed so ignominiously, should prove successful in New England. Douglas Campbell, in his book entitled The Puritan in Holland, England, and America, gives an explanation which he feels is fairly simple. New England received the great mass of its early settlers between 1630 and 1640, before the outbreak of Civil War in England. After hostilities had begun immigration was less frequent. Preceding and during this period, Puritanism was at its height. The party (for such was the Puritan organization) was under persecution and hardship, and did not attract the "camp-followers" who, attracted by Cromwell's success, flocked to its banners and brought with them some measure of disgrace to the term Puritan.

A select few Englishmen were just beginning to appreciate fully the conditions and events existing in their country. They began to feel that their native land was beyond hope of improvement. Some of them (and by no means the worst, but rather the best of them) set forth to try out their ideas, and eventually founded a "new" England across the ocean. It should be borne in mind that these men were not typical Englishmen of their time. The non-conformists were driven out of England by the persecutions of Elizabeth, James and Charles (who ruled, successively, from 1557 to 1649). They were unusual men, intellectually; most of them could read and write at a time when the mass of their countrymen were wholly illiterate, and many of them were graduates of the highest schools of the day. They seem unquestionably to have been actuated solely by principle. There was small reason for hypocrisy.

It was the exceptional character of the men who eventually founded New England, as well perhaps as their experience with republican government in Holland, that made the experiment of self-government succeed in New England while it failed at home.

But it was not only the Puritan and non-conformist who left England. Changes in the industries of England had unsettled social conditions and social relationships. The middle and lower classes, engaged largely in agricultural pursuits, were worse off than ever before. Yet notwithstanding their natural desire to better themselves, few would have left home for that reason alone. It was the combination of their economic difficulties and dissatisfaction with the state of religion, politics and morals in their country, which determined them to leave England.

The number of non-conformists who left England between 1560 and 1650 is not known, and cannot be reliably estimated. Historians have said that they went to Holland "in great numbers." Their choice of Holland is wholly understandable. The country had, in 1579, succeeded in freeing itself from outside control which it had suffered for several centuries. By the Union of Utrecht, it had become a part of the republic of The Seven Provinces, with William the Silent, founder of the house of Orange, as leader and hereditary stadtholder. Holland was already largely protestant in religion.

The most famous group of non-conformists emigrating to Holland from England was of course the Separatists, who went there in 1609 with their pastor, John Robinson, the founder of the Puritan settlement at Leiden. Robinson supported the projected emigration to America, and would have sailed on the Mayflower in 1620 had a majority of his congregation sailed. A majority were willing to join the Pilgrims who landed at Plymouth, but money for the expedition could not be raised.

This 1609 Leiden settlement was only one of many similar English settlements in Holland. After 1581 a large number of Englishmen, not only for religious and political purposes, but to develop the textile industry under newly negotiated trade agreements between Holland and England, removed to Holland. In 1617 there were English textile trade establishments in twenty-two different cities of Holland. At the time of the early settlements in America there was hardly a town of prominence in the Seven Provinces that was without a Scottish Presbyterian or an English Puritan preacher, ministering to its English residents.

While some of the English emigrants doubtless went with the Dutch to New Netherlands (or New Amsterdam), and lost their identity as Englishmen through the Dutch records, a great many of them emigrated directly to the English settlements, and resumed life with their fellow-countrymen.

It is altogether possible that Benjamin Cooley, and perhaps other Cooley immigrants, may have come to New England from Holland, rather than directly from England. Supporting this possibility are these facts: (1) None of the available ship passenger lists from English ports to New England during the 17th century gives the name of any Cooley, yet several Cooleys were in New England at early dates. (2) A good many English families moved into Holland not only for political and religious reasons, but to engage in the textile business, which by 1617 flourished in at least 22 cities in Holland. (3) Benjamin Cooley was a weaver by trade.

COOLEYS IN AMERICA

The earliest immigrants to New England came from England and from Holland. The Swedes settled in Delaware in 1636, but no names suggesting Cooley appear in the records of the Swedish colony. There were Cooley-Cowley immigrants to Virginia and the Barbadoes during the 17th and 18th centuries.

Of the early 17th century Cowley-Cooley immigrants to New England, only two are known to have left families to carry on the name, one as Cooley, the other as Coley. The first is used by the descendants of Benjamin Cooley of Springfield, Mass., circa 1640. The family, now comprising the 8th to 12th generations in this country, is large and widely scattered. It was for the purpose of uniting the family, and completing partial records of the descendants of Benjamin Cooley, that The Cooley Family Association was formed in 1936, and to contribute towards that end this book is now being published.

The other Cooley immigrant to New England known to have left descendants was Samuel Coole, who took the name of Coley. He settled in Milford and Fairfield, Conn. No attempt has been made to prove a relationship between Samuel Coole-Coley and Benjamin Cooley. In support of at least an acquaintanceship, and perhaps a blood relationship between them, is the fact that their daughters married brothers in 1664 (Abileneh, daughter of Samuel, m. Japhet Chapin; and Bethia, daughter of Benjamin, m. Japhet's brother, Henry Chapin). A record of the descendants of Samuel Coley is being compiled by Mrs. L. S. Porter of Oshkosh, Wis.

1 Benjamin (b. about 1617), in Springfield in 1642/3, with his wife Sarah (Savage).

2 Bryan Cowley, sailed to the Barbadoes (Drake, pages 113, 114).

3 Charles, prob. related to Henry, lived in Boston; he and his wife Mary had a daughter Elizabeth, b. Aug. 23, 1689, Boston, and son Ezekiel, b. Aug. 27, 1688 (Vital Records).

4 Dennis, in Stonington, d. 1683 (Savage).

5 Goodman Coole had 12 acres, 60 pools, and 6 shares, in Exeter, N. H. (Early Settlers in Exeter, N. H. between 1639-1643, N. E. H. G. R.).

6 Henry, in Boston in 1670, was a cooper, and died before 1677 leaving a widow Rebecca (Savage). Henry and Rebecca had Rebecca, b. Nov. 25, 1669; Mary, b. Feb. 24, 1671, and Henry, b. July 27, 1676, Boston (Vital Records).

7 John, b. about 1615, was in Ipswich in 1638, removed to Salem, and d. there Mar. 30, 1654 (Savage).

8 Richard, in Hatfield, Mass., before 1648 (Media Pub. Co.).

9 Robert Collie, ae. 20, imbarqued in the Hopewell to the Barbadoes (17th cy., date not known) (Drake, page 100-101).

10 Roger Cowley, Esq., owned 88 acres of land, 1 hired servant, 2 bought servants, and 7 slaves, in St. Michael's Parish, the Barbadoes. He and his wife Susannah had a daughter Elizabeth, baptised 27 Feb. 1678. His younger son Roger was buried 9 Oct. 1678 (Hotten, pages 430, 452).

11 Samuel, b. about 1610, freeman in Mass. Bay Col. in 1631, and was here in 1630. He was one of the original settlers of Milford, Conn., and established his family there and in Fairfield, Conn. His descendants spell the name Coley (Savage).

12 Thomas Colley owned 10 acres of land and 4 negroes in Christ Church Parish, Barbadoes, 22 Dec. 1679 (Hotten, page 476).

13 Tobias and Sarah Cowley were in Northumberland, Va., in 1650 (Media Pub. Co.).

14 William Cowley settled in Northampton, Va., in 1647 (Media Pub. Co.); ae. 20, sailed to "Virginea" 23 June 1635 (Hotten, page 95).

15 William, b. about 1604, was in Mass. Bay Col. in 1634. The word "Felt" appears after his name. He was a mariner of New London, 1642, and alive in 1664 when he gave his age as 60 (Savage).

16 Willson Cowley was a passenger on the ship America which sailed to Virginia in 1635 (N. E. H. G. R., Vol. IV, page 190; and Hotten's List of Immigrants).

18th Century

17 James Cooley, b. Ireland, emigrated to America at an unknown date, prob. around 1745; he lived in Dutchess Co., N. Y. His descendants have been compiled and appear in The Rathbone Genealogy.

18 William Coole (b. 1753), ae. 21 in 1774, sailed from Port of London 28 Aug. 1774, on the ship Rebecca to Maryland; he was from Dublin (N. E. H. G. R., Vol. LXIII, page 17).

19 Peter Cooley (b. 1736), aged 38 in 1774, a weaver, sailed Feb. 1774 from the Port of London on the ship Planter to Virginia; he had with him three sons, Peter, Jr., aged 18, John, aged 16, and Joseph, aged 12 (N. E. H. G. R., Vol. LXIII, page 17).

GENERAL COMMENTS

The purpose of this chapter has been to set down the miscellaneous information regarding Cooleys which has accumulated in the records of searches made or authorized by Mortimer E. Cooley and his brother, Ernest L. Cooley,* deceased. These brothers made every effort to secure, in all instances, accurate facts, without regard for their predilections in any way.

This chapter has no thesis; it is an attempt to correlate facts and conjectures (made clear when it is conjecture) regarding the Cooley Family in Normandy, England and Ireland; a memorandum regarding the possibility of Cooleys in Holland; and a summary of all known first-generation Cooleys in America during the 17th, and in a few cases, the 18th, century. No attempt has been made to exhaust the number of 18th century immigrants, since the chief concern of the research undertaken has been to establish, so far to no avail, the parentage and ancestry, and the date and place of birth and marriage, of Benjamin Cooley of Springfield, Mass., together with like facts for his wife, now known only as Sarah.*

To secure information prior to the first records of Benjamin and Sarah Cooley in 1642 in Springfield, Mass., seems to members of the family to be of primary importance. In order to avoid duplication of material already accumulated, and in order to clarify that information, as much as possible, this chapter has been prepared.

* Lyman Weeks gives Sarah's maiden surname as Tremaine. A thorough search of the Tremaine genealogy, and for Tremaine data in contemporary records, has yielded no proof of this statement. Another suggestion is that she may have been Sarah Colton. See Chapter IV.

Chapter II

HERALDRY

COOLEY COATS OF ARMS. LINEAGE OF THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.

HERALDRY IS THE SCIENCE of armorial bearings or coats of arms, and the art of blazoning arms; in particular, arranging or explaining in proper terms all that relates to the bearing of Arms, Crests, Badges, Quarterings, and other hereditary marks of honor.

According to Sir Bernard Burke, the art in England dates back only to the archives of the Holy Wars, and its maturity was reached in the chivalrous days of feudalism. It has never been decided when the bearing of arms first became hereditary. Some time after the reign of Edward I a statute was enacted requiring every freeholder to have his proper seal of arms. The Roll of Arms made between 1240 and 1245 is the earliest heraldic document in England.

In England, all persons of proved descent from an ancestor whose armorial ensigns have been acknowledged by one of the Heralds' Visitations, or from an ancestor whose right to carry arms has been properly admitted, are entitled to bear those arms by right of inheritance. In America there is, of course, no law on the subject. It is generally accepted that the right of an American to the use of an inherited or granted coat of arms depends upon his proof of descent from an ancestor to whom the arms were granted, or who inherited the right to bear such arms.

There is no such thing as a family coat of arms; that is, arms which any person of a certain family name is entitled to use because such arms were granted to a person of the same name.

Until the date and place of birth of Benjamin Cooley of Springfield, Mass., circa 1640, are known, as well as his parentage and ancestry, naturally the right of his descendants to bear arms assigned to any Cooley family is most questionable. The family of the descendants of Benjamin Cooley has every right to assume new arms for use by members of the family. Any American individual, society, town, etc., may assume new arms which can be registered as such with the New England Historic Genealogical Society. This Society has a Committee on Heraldry which registers arms of American families, both inherited and assumed. New arms are naturally separate from the register of inherited or granted arms, and should be so considered.

With the foregoing in mind, and with the hope that no confusion will result from so doing, a list of all known arms granted to families by the names of Cooley (variously spelled) is given. There can be no doubt of the general interest in arms borne by families of names similar to that of Benjamin Cooley.

In order to understand the technical terminology of heraldry, one should have access to a heraldic dictionary or glossary. Two terms here are defined: quartering of arms shows and perpetuates the descent of a family from heiresses or co-heiresses of other houses; differences are distinctions used to represent various branches of one family; this term is also used as a verb; i.e., differenced.

The only reference known concerning the right of Benjamin Cooley to bear arms is the statement found in A Registry of American Families entitled to Coat Armor from the Earliest to the Present Time, by William Armstrong Crozier (1904), which reads:

Cooley, Mass. Benjamin Cooley, Springfield, 1646 (Rutland). Ermine, on a chevron sable, three leopards' heads jessant-de-lis or. Crest: A leopard's head jessant-de-lis or.

The Committee on Heraldry of the New England Historic Genealogical Society wrote, Feb. 15, 1938, concerning Crozier's registry: "It is not accepted by this Committee as an authority because it is merely a commercial proposition, without critical value, and giving no references."

The College of Arms in London was asked to examine these arms, and in a letter of Jan. 19, 1937, Anthony R. Wagner, Esq., Portcullis, College of Arms, wrote as follows:

The above arms were examined....and were found to have been confirmed by Wm. Dethick, Garter King of Arms, to Robert Cowley, grandson of John Cowley of Shropshire, gentleman, "descended of a younger house of that auncient familie" on the 18th of August, 1597. But the Crest granted at the same time was not as described, being a lion's head erased argent holding in the mouth a dexter hand couped.

No connection between Robert Cowley, grandson of John Cowley of Shropshire, and Benjamin Cooley, of Springfield, Mass., has been found. No authority for Crozier's statement that the arms granted to Robert Cowley in 1597 rightfully belong to Benjamin Cooley has been found.

THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON

Because the Duke of Wellington is so frequently mentioned in connection with the Cooley family his lineage is given here, with the thought that it may be of interest to members of the family.

Concerning the ancestry and date of arriving in Ireland of Walter Cowley with whom this lineage begins, there is considerable disagreement in the various authorities. The lineage given here is taken from Sir Bernard Burke's Genealogical and Heraldic Dictionary, 67th edition, London, 1905.

*Walter Cowley*¹, an English gentleman, was sent to Ireland during the reign of Henry VII (1485-1509) to watch the conduct of Gerald, 8th Earl of Kildare, then the Lord-Deputy of Ireland. He lived at Drogheda, where he acquired some property in 1506, and left a son and heir,

*Robert Cowley*² a confidential agent of Lord Cromwell (Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Essex, 1485(?) - 1540), was appointed Master of the Rolls in Ireland, and a Privy Councillor. He was removed from his offices by Sr. Anthony St. Leger, Lord Deputy in 1542, and went to England, where he died Aug. 1546, leaving, by Anne his wife, 2 sons and a daughter, Walter, Nicholas who was living in Ireland in 1546, and Maud.

*Walter Cowley*³, the elder son, was appointed Solicitor General of Ireland in 1537. (The discrepancy of dates for the arrival from England of Walter Cowley may be occasioned by the fact that in the first and third generations of the family, both representatives were named Walter; and the second generation, Robert, having returned to England, the second Walter³ may have been thought to be the original member of the family to remove to Ireland from England.) On surrendering his office as Solicitor General in 1546 to John Bath, Walter Cowley by patent dated 5 Nov. 1548 was constituted Surveyor-General of the kingdom. He had sons: Sir Henry, who appears below; and Robert, appointed in 1535 Clerk of the Hanaper, and Justice of Peace for King's Co., m. 1566

Garet Wesley's mother was Elizabeth Colley, an aunt of Richard Colley who inherited the Wellesley estates though he in no way represented the family. By virtue of his descent from Alison Cusack (see Sir Henry Colley⁴ above) he was actually a 7th cousin of Garet Wesley, a relationship of which they were probably unaware. (Adapted from *C(okayne)-G. Chapter III

THE BEGINNING OF NEW ENGLAND

THE FIRST PERMANENT SETTLEMENT founded by Europeans, not only in Massachusetts but in New England, was that at Plymouth, named for their last English port by the nineteen families of Pilgrims that landed December 16, 1620, in New England. On November 3, 1620, before the Mayflower had reached its destination, King James I granted a patent incorporating the Duke of Lenox and others as the Council of Plymouth for all "that part of North America which lies between the 40th and 58th degrees of north latitude," which should be called New England in America.

In 1622, through the efforts of Mr. Thomas Weston, a settlement was started at Weymouth; in 1624, by Rev. John White, Gloucester was begun. The colony at Gloucester removed to Naumkeag, under Roger Conant, in 1626; the Naumkeag settlement later was called Salem. In 1625, Capt. Wollaston began a plantation at Merrymount which became Braintree.

Sir Henry Roswell and others, on March 19, 1628, were granted by the Council of Plymouth a patent for a tract of land between a line three miles north of the Merrimac and a line three miles south of the Charles River, "extending from the Atlantic westerly to the South Sea." On March 4, 1629, King Charles I confirmed this patent of The Government and Colony of the Massachusetts Bay in New England. William Pynchon, the founder of Springfield, Mass., was one of the 26 Patentees named by the King. In 1631, Robert, Earl of Warwick, President of the Plymouth Council, granted a patent for Connecticut.

NOTE: This chapter is included only to review early history which took place about the time Benjamin Cooley came to America.

In 1630, seventeen ships with nearly sixteen hundred passengers, largely Puritans or Nonconformists, some of them of considerable distinction, arrived at Salem. These people settled Dorchester, Roxbury, Watertown and Cambridge, and laid the foundation for Boston, the metropolis of New England.

By 1640, the English population in New England was about 25,000; to these, collectively, may be extended the term "Pilgrim Fathers." In an interesting summary of conclusions reached after a careful analysis of the topographical sources of English immigration during 1620-1650, published as a New York Genealogical and Biographical bulletin, it was found that 57% of these original immigrants came from counties bordering on the North Sea and the English Channel from The Wash to the Bristol Channel; and that the Home Counties (Bedford, Berks, Bucks, Herts and Surrey) surrounding London supplied 11%, the Midlands (Leicester, Notts, Northants, Worcester, Warwick, and Derby) supplied 9%. So approximately 80% of all the English who migrated before 1650 "originated south of a line drawn from the Bristol Channel to The Wash."*

The population of England and Wales at the beginning of the 17th century was between three and four millions. Probably not more than a quarter of the land was cultivated, the remainder being given over to woods, moors and fens. The population could be divided into four general classes: (1) gentlemen, all landed proprietors and a few other classes; (2) citizens or burgesses; (3) yeomen; and (4) laborers. Since the majority of those emigrating to New England were of the Yeoman class, with only a few of the other classes included, a contemporary description from Dexter of the last-named two classes seems pertinent.

Yeomen are these, which by our laws are called Legales Homines, free men borne English, and may dispend of their owne free land in yearelie revenue, to the summe of fortie shillings sterling (or six pounds as monie goeth in our times). This sort of people have a certeine preheminance, and more estimation than laborouers and (the common sort of) artificers, and (these) comonlie liue wealthilie, keepe good houses, and trauell to get riches. They are also for the most part farmers to gentlemen. . . and with grasing, frequenting of markets, & keeping of seruants (not idle seruantes as the gentlemen doo, but such as get both their owne and part of their masters liuing) do come to great welth, in somuch that manie of them are able and doo buie the lands of vnthrifitie gentlemen and often send their sonnes to the colleges, to the vniversities, and to the Ins of the court; or otherwise leauing them sufficient lands wherevpon they may liue without labor, doo make them by those meanes to become gentlemen.

The. . . .last sort of people in England are daie labourers, poore husbandmen, and some retailers (which haue no free land), copie holders, and all artificers, as tailers, shomakers, carpenters, brickmakers, masons, etc. As for slaues and bondmen we have none. . . (These) therefore haue neither voice nor authoritie in the common wealth, but are to be ruled, and not to rule others; yet they are not altogether neglected, for in cities and corporat towns, for default of yeomen, they are faine to make vp at inquests of such members of people. And in villages they are commonlie made churchwardens, sidemen, aleconners, (now and then) constables, and manie times inioie the name of hedboroughes.

According to Thornbury, the Gentlemen lived in mansions, the rooms of which often would be lofty and spacious, and would have the walls hung with tapestry, or wainscoted with native oak. The domestic offices and farm buildings would be near, but not under the same roof. The better residences of country gentlemen included a large hall and chapel.

The yeoman's home had several rooms, and was roofed with reeds. The cottages of laborers usually were of clay walls upon a timber frame, thatched with straw, windowed with one or two lattices, and seldom included more than two rooms.

The farmer has no Flemish tapestry or Dutch linen; he drinks from bowls, and has but a plain table board and little plate; his bed is flax, and his curtains of homespun wool; his coat of frieze or Kendal-green; he has two doublets, and not often more than two servants.

The population of New England in 1640, the time of greatest interest to the descendants of Benjamin Cooley, was largely drawn from the yeomanry of England, "free men who constituted the nucleus of the Puritan movement, of inborn intelligence, good sense, solid habits of industry, frugality, and self-reliance, and such rude education as was within their reach."

According to Shipton, the population of New England remained largely homogeneous as late as 1687. In Boston, 134 out of 200 freemen were members of the Congregational Church. The great early migration was followed by a large percentage of skilled craftsmen, carpenters, and shopkeepers. In 1686/7, French Huguenots established their first large settlement, in Rhode Island; they were so mistreated that most of them moved to New York prior to 1700. Some had settled in Massachusetts, where they were surprisingly well treated. In 1708, an influx of Irish, English and Huguenots came to Boston, and by the early 20's there was a considerable increase of non-English immigrants to New England. Due to business conditions, immigration greatly declined in the 1730's.

But the very early immigrants to New England were nearly 100% English, and it was chiefly from these that the first settlers of Springfield, Mass., came.

CHAPTER IV

EARLY SPRINGFIELD AND LONGMEADOW

HARRY ANDREW WRIGHT

In the autumn of 1635, William Pynchon, with two scouts, John Cable and John Woodcock, sailed up the Connecticut river in their "great shallops"¹ and concluded an exploring trip at the confluence of the Agawam and the Connecticut rivers, where, as related by Edward Johnson in 1654, they found a district "fitly seated for a beaver trade."² It is quite possible that the scouts had viewed and chosen the land on a previous excursion and that Pynchon's visit was to give his final approval to the selection.

Nothing contributed so much toward the lure for the exploration and settlement of North America as the quest for the beaver. Interest became quite pronounced early in the seventeenth century. Bartholomew Gosnold voyaged hither in 1602, trading incidentally for furs with the Indians. In 1603, Martin Pring coasted along the New England shore and reported seeing animals "whose furs may yield no small gain to us." In 1614, Captain John Smith, of Pocahontas fame, reported that "With eight or nine others, ranging the coast in a small boat, we got for trifles, near eleven hundred beaver skins." English merchants, who financed various colonizing enterprises, urged the emigrants to devote their energies to such commercial activities, rather than to agriculture. At times, the shipment of beaver skins totaled as high as 200,000 a year, which, eliminating Sundays, would average around 650 a day.

The question naturally arises, what use was made of such vast quantities of skins? Were European women in need of that number of fur coats and neck pieces? The answer is decidedly in the negative for the skins were put to a much more prosaic use: the manufacture of felt, primarily for making hats. All which takes the story back to much earlier beginnings.

Hats are a variety of the ancient cap and bonnet and were early made of velvet, silk and other rich materials. Formed of felt and assuming a certain firmness of fabric, hats began to be manufactured in England about 1510 and we hear of them superseding caps and softer headgear, in the reign of Elizabeth. Wool was the material first employed in forming felt hats, but wool was scarce and in great demand for the weaving of cloths.

St. Clement, the patron saint of the hatters, is credited with first producing felt. It is said that when on a pilgrimage, he put carded wool between his feet and the sole of his sandals and found at his journey's end that the wool was converted into cloth. Regardless of tradition, it is a fact that if carded wool is thus continually trodden and at the same time moistened, it will become felt and all the manufacturer's processes of felting are but modifications of such treatment. It is merely taking advantage of the natural tendency of hairs to interlace and cling to each other.

As trade with America developed, the fur of the beaver was adopted, being finer and softer than wool and of lesser cost. Hence the term beaver, as synonymous with hat, came into use. For more than two centuries, fine beaver hats formed the head covering of the higher classes of Great Britain.

As American colonies became established and more and more grew the need for protection to the merchants and bankers who financed those enterprises, the English parliament, in 1638, passed an act prohibiting the making of hats from any material other than "beaver stuff and beaver wool." Great impetus was thus given to the trade and so was created a monopoly that virtually existed for two hundred years.

A SHALLOP OF THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY

The term shallop is an Anglicized form of the French chaloupe, the German schaluppe, and has survived as sloop. Used for disembarking on shelving beaches, it had no keel, and so had a lee-board, as does a sailing canoe. In this photograph the lee-board is lowered. Today a center-board would be used. As the shallop was used as a ship's tender, it had no bowsprit. This photograph is of a measured drawing made by the Nautical School in Rotterdam from sketches made by Dr. Geoffrey Callendar, of the National Maritime Museum, Greenwich, England, and is based upon data of Harry Andrew Wright, with whose permission this illustration and explanation are used. A three-foot model of this shallop was made in 1936 at Springfield, Massachusetts, for the Tercentenary exhibit.

On their arrival at Agawam in 1635, the three explorers encountered a little band of nomad Indians, eighteen families in all, under the leadership of two natives whom Pynchon designated as "Commucke and Matanchan, ancient Indians of Agawam."³ Had Pynchon arrived a year earlier or a year later he might not have found a single Indian there, but the English happened to come in 1635 and there this little band of gypsies just happened then to be.

Probably the natives had little comprehension of what was meant by land ownership in the English sense and they certainly had no knowledge of what obligations land sales entailed. But Pynchon was not a free agent. His associates had cautioned that "if any of the savages pretend right of inheritance to all or any part of the lands granted in our patent, we pray you endeavor to purchase their title that we may avoid the least scruple of intrusion."⁴

Therefore, Pynchon presumably assured the natives that the land which they occupied was theirs and that he proposed to buy it from them. A tentative bargain was made, the Indians eventually receiving for their domain eighteen fathams of wampum, eighteen coats, eighteen hatchets, eighteen hoes and eighteen knives, in addition to which an Indian called Wrutherna acquired two extra coats, the reason for which is suggested by the fact that the composition of his name indicates that he was a prince in embryo.⁵

to Roxbury for the winter, preparing for the exodus of his associates in the spring.⁶ Cable and Woodcock remained and it is apparent that they had with them both cattle and swine, for when Pynchon returned in the spring of 1636 he found that the future of his enterprise had been sadly jeopardized. Not only had the livestock so ravaged the native planting grounds that the Indians "demanded a greater sum to buy their rights in said land"⁷ but they also insisted that if similar damage was done in the future the English were to "pay as it is worth."⁸ All prior plans were thereby set at naught for the basic intent of the settlement contemplated the full use and occupation of the Agawam meadows. Fencing such a tract being out of the question a complete removal to the east side was the only alternative.^{8a} There, on May 14, 1636, gathered eight men, "being all the first adventurers and subscribers for the plantation," to organize their body-politic.⁹ In view of the changed conditions due to this enforced removal, the question of provision for their cattle loomed large in their minds, and of the fifteen by-laws adopted, four were related to the control of the remaining pastures, "The cow pasture to the north of end brook, lying northward from the town; the pasture called Nayas toward Patuckett on the side of Agawam, lying about four miles above in the river, and the long meadow called Masacksic." It was agreed that "the long meadow called Masacksic, lying in the way to Dorchester (Windsor), shall be distributed to every man as we shall think meet, except as we shall find other conveniency for some for their milch cattle and other cattle.”¹⁰ The long-meadow was thus early recognized as being too valuable to be divided without full consideration of the benefits to all.

On July 15, 1636, the Indians affixed their marks to the formal deed, which included three specific tracts.¹¹ For the Agawam Meadows, on the west side of the Connecticut river, five-ninths of the compensation was given. Two-ninths of the total was given for the land now occupied by the city of Springfield and extending north to the Chicopee river. The final two-ninths purchased the “long-meadow.” As Pynchon put it in his deed, “The said ancient Indians do, with the consent of the other Indians and in particular with the consent of Machetuhod, Wenepawin and Mohemoos, truck and sell the ground and muckeosquittaj (muk-kosqut-aug, “meadow land”) and grounds adjoining called (massa-auksic, “the great land”) for four fatham of wampum, four coats, four hatchets, four hoes and four knives.” For posterity John Holyoke, the recorder, when he entered the deed on the records in 1679, added the notation that “Masacksic is what the English call the Long meadow, below Springfield, on the east side of Quinecticot River.”¹²

In 1647, Pynchon charged on his ledger to each of the forty-two inhabitants, based on the quantity of land owned by the individual, a pro rata share of the value of the articles delivered to the Indians in exchange for their land, the total being £30, a present day value of perhaps \$600.¹³ Thus the Agawam meadows cost him approximately £16; the Springfield site £7, and the long-meadow also £7. The acre-value is indicated by the charge against Benjamin Cooley, who then owned $40\frac{1}{2}$ acres, his assessment being eleven shillings and two pence, or a bit over three pence (six cents) per acre. This was his total expense for securing a partnership in the community enterprise, including title to that amount of land and the right to participate in future land distributions.

This $40\frac{1}{2}$ acres comprised the four acre home-lot on the town street, together with the adjoining six acres of wet meadow and woodland on which he established his first home in Springfield. Included also was the first division or "dividend" of five acres "in the Neck over the river" as well as the second division of five acres "over Agawam river." Such dividends always accrued to a home-lot, even though the dividends were declared prior to the actual granting of the home site itself. The long-meadow grant of nine acres in 1645 brought his total grants to thirty-nine acres, while actual measurements apparently provided an "overplus" of an acre and a half additional.¹⁴

In any consideration of the adequacy of the payment to the natives it must be remembered that they had an almost limitless domain at their disposal to which they could and later did retire. So anxious were the natives for the advice, counsel and protection of the whites as neighbors, that certain groups had earlier even expressed a willingness to pay the English to settle in the Connecticut valley.¹⁵ Moreover, by the deed of sale by which the Indians transferred their title, they reserved to themselves about everything that was of value to them—the right to fish on the entire premises, to hunt deer, to gather walnuts, acorns, sasachiminesh (cranberries) and to "have and enjoy all that cot-tinackeesh (kitkanakish, "plantation ground") or ground that is now planted”¹⁶—the cultivated fields on which they raised their tobacco, corn, beans, pumpkins and squashes. For a time thereafter, their lives were but a dream of peace and indolence. Their miraculous white neighbors guarded them against their ancient enemies, the Mohawks (literally, “they who eat animate things”), and their newly acquired English tools made their daily tasks mere pastimes as compared with former days.

Small wonder that they lingered on to enjoy these benefits.

In the deed, the description of the land is most inadequate. Of that on the east side of the Connecticut, but one bound is given; the Chicopee river at the north. The Connecticut was of course the westerly bound and the easterly limits were later construed to be five miles from that river. The southerly bounds apparently were understood to be at Raspberry Brook, at the lower end of the long-meadow, for eventually it was so determined.

The northerly part of this tract was claimed by Menis, Wrutherna and Naponpenam and the southerly part by Matchehood, Wenepawin and Mohemoos, but just where the division was between them is not shown in the deed. The northerly part included Nayasset (nai-es-et, “where the corner is”) and Usquaiok. John Holyoke, in 1679, said that “Nayasset is the lands of Three Corner Meadow and of the Plain. Usquaiok is the Mill river with the land adjoining.”¹⁷ Usquaiok was Pynchon’s phonetic rendition of iskwai-auk, “the last land” or “the end of the land.” There is nothing in the composition of the phrase even suggestive of “river” and it referred purely to a boundary—the land between Mill river and Pecousic brook.

Europeans usually bounded lands by mountain crests, to include entire valleys on both sides of a river.

¹⁷ Indian Deeds, page 13.

The Indians, however, bounded them at the river—a defensive barrier to people who relied so much on bows, the strings of which were not friendly to water. Moreover, the river bounds were always at points where the character of the land showed a distinct change. No meadow brook (except when small tracts were later sold) was ever designated as a boundary. In Longmeadow, neither Cooley Brook nor Wheelmeadow Brook would have been so designated, for conditions there were identical on both sides of the streams. But at Raspberry Brook, the meadow terminated and up the hill to the south were the great plains where Enfield now is. At the north, the long-meadow ended at the narrow pass below the misnamed King Philip's Stockade, just easterly of which Pecousic (pecou-es-ic, "where the valley widens") separated Masacksic from Usquaik. There the hill fell so abruptly to the river that the road from Springfield to Longmeadow, completed in 1647, was from necessity on the very bank of the river. When in 1656 John Lombard received a five acre grant of the most northerly bit of the meadows then remaining, it was a triangular piece of land, the point of which intruded itself into the narrow pass. So limited was the area that the grant was made with the proviso that the highway should always be allowed for, "whatever the river may eat out."¹⁸ Today, the railroad tracks completely occupy the restricted area. It was an ideal Indian ambush point and there is where John Keep was slain in 1676. As in the minds of the Indians, the long-meadow ended northerly at Pecousic, so it also did in the minds of the English and when, in 1713/14, Longmeadow became a separate precinct, the division was made at Pecousic.¹⁹ It so remained until June 2, 1890, when, in order that contemplated additions to Forest Park might be included in the Springfield area, the present division line was established. Many writers have been misled in their conclusions by a lack of understanding of these facts.

When the eight pioneers gathered at Agawam on May 15, 1636, to establish their town, they committed their plans to a writing that they severally signed. Following the preamble, was an affirmation of their intention to establish a church "as soon as we can."

Then followed this most significant clause:

"We intend that our town shall be composed of forty families, or, if we think meet after, to alter our purpose, yet not to exceed the number of fifty families, rich and poor."²⁰

Rich and poor; masters and servants; gentlemen and yeomen; peers and commoners. That is exactly what was envisioned. And so the choicest lands, the present Main street, from Court Square to Cypress street, were reserved for the gentlemen, while the home-lots of the yeomen stretched away southerly to the Mill river.

At that period more than one American community was projected by men of wealth and influence who planned strict control of its life, providing a little principality for their own ends. Saybrook, at the mouth of the Connecticut river, was sponsored by Lord Saye and Sele, Lord Brook, Sir Matthew Boynton and other titled persons who proposed settling there, provided the General Court would allow for two classes of citizenry in New England. When their plans were frowned upon and set at naught, they lost all interest in the enterprise.

Unlike later settlements such as Westfield, Brookfield, Brimfield, Enfield and Suffield, which were the results of a reaching out by land-hungry farmers, Springfield was designed to be an industrial community.

²⁰ Burt, Vol. I, page 156.

For its support a certain amount of agricultural activities were imperative for subsistence, but these were merely incidental. The life of the Springfield enterprise was intended to be based on the fur trade. Pynchon projected a self-supporting community, serviced by its own builders, carpenters, brick masons, tailors, weavers, smiths. In his original plans he had provided the nucleus of such a body. When "many fell off for fear of the difficulties"²¹ due to the enforced removal to the sterile lands of the east side, a less stout hearted person would have been utterly discouraged. Of the eight men who signed the organization agreement of May 14, 1636, Pynchon and his son-in-law, Henry Smith, alone became permanent settlers.

However, Pynchon brought his persuasive powers to the task and in 1639 there were fourteen settlers. In 1641, nineteen were established; in April 1643, twenty-two. The master-mind was a resourceful one. Through agents in England he secured young men, indentured to serve him for a term of years. Thus Samuel Terry came to Springfield. In 1650 the Terry indenture was assigned to Benjamin Cooley who was obligated to impart to his protege the "art and mystery" of linen weaving. Terry grew to be an important citizen and the ancestor of a large family among whom were the successful Connecticut clock makers. Through his own scouts Pynchon drew recruits from other towns. In 1643 he wrote, "the Lord hath added some three or four young men out of the river to us lately."²² These were Thomas Cooper, John Harmon and Roger Pritchard, from the "river towns", Windsor, Hartford and Wethersfield. As today a movie-talent scout roams the country in search of new material, so young John Pynchon visited the nearby towns. Under date of 1646, ²¹ Burt, Vol. I, page 157.

John wrote in his father's ledger, "Nathaniell Browne came to my father's the 21: of Aprill at night: He came from Hartford. I agreed with him at Hartford for £4, 15s for 6 months, viz, the 6 summer months from the 21: of Aprill to the 22 of October, 1646."²³

Nevertheless, admittance as an inhabitant was a privilege not lightly acquired. Only those were admitted who could contribute something of value to the community—the financial ability to pay others to work; the ownership of merchandise needed by the townsmen; abilities and talents helpful to the growth of the town. Strangers who slipped in were warned out of town. In case of doubt concerning a desirable applicant, a bond was required. Even sons of such a prominent citizen as Deacon Samuel Chapin were admitted only on these conditions. When, in 1660, Henry Chapin (who married Bethia Cooley) was admitted, the deacon gave a bond of £20 "to secure the town from any charge which may arise" and in 1663 he gave a similar bond when Josiah Chapin became an inhabitant.²⁴

About 1643-1645, a determined effort was made to recruit the artisans and tradesmen necessary to make Springfield independent of outside sources of supply, and at that period the population practically doubled. Then arrived John Matthews the cooper, Griffith Jones the tanner, and Hugh Parsons the brick maker. Many other needs were similarly cared for, but even as late as January 8, 1645/46 "George Colton and Miles Morgan were appointed to do their best to get a smith for the town."²⁵ Apparently their efforts bore fruit, for on September 4, 1646, a contract was made with "Francis Ball for a shop for a smith."²⁶

Probably equal efforts were made to secure a competent weaver—a worker of both wool and linen. Ample raw material was then available but the skill and equipment to make use of it were lacking. In 1633 Governor Winthrop recorded that “John Oldham and three with him went to Connecticut (river) to trade. They brought back hemp which grows there in great abundance and is much better than the English.”²⁷ By 1647, flax-growing in Springfield had become so extensive that the retting of it in the town brook was judged so “noisome and offensive” that the practice was prohibited.²⁸ Here were the requirements for the clothing needed by the townsmen, but the skilled hand of the weaver was wanting. Sheep were then few, but when time provided a weaver, Pyncheon provided ample flocks. There can be little doubt that Benjamin Cooley became an honored member of the Springfield community at the request and behest of William Pyncheon after searching inquiry as to his ability and personality.

There is ample evidence that Cooley was a skilled worker in both flax and wool. In 1650 he took Samuel Terry as an apprentice, agreeing to “teach him the trade of linen weaving.” The inventory of Cooley’s estate, taken after his death in 1684, includes:²⁹

Two looms, slayds (weavers’ reeds) and warping bars	07-00-00
Serge, kersy, say, penistone and linen cloth	20-08-00
Cotton wool and sheep’s wool	05-00-00
Crop of flax
Linsey-woolsey, yarns, spinning wheels, tubs (dye vats)

Here was a stock of finished cloths alone priced at about $1000 in present day values.

Out of the welter of almost unreadable entries in the Pynchon account books, one can detect that Cooley was concerned with such items as "making three pair stockings; $3\frac{3}{4}$ yards of red cotton; 1 yard of blue cotton; $1\frac{1}{2}$ yards of blue linen; 1 yard of lockram; 14 yards of white tape."³⁰

This would seem to be the source from which John Pynchon obtained material for the two blue coats, the blue waistcoat, the red cotton and the breeches that he gave to the Indian, Umpanchela, in part payment for the land that became the town of Hadley.³¹ The efforts of Benjamin Cooley as weaver, plus those of Thomas Stebbins and Samuel Marshfield, the local tailors, would seem to have played their part in the bedecking of the Indian chieftain.

Though physical conditions at Hartford, Windsor and Wethersfield were far more alluring than at Springfield, yet the strict church element dominant there left much to be desired. It was that same rigidity that later led to the secession of the people who founded Hadley in 1659. The benign influence of William Pynchon at Springfield is exemplified in the sermons of Rev. George Moxon. Young John Pynchon, as a lad of fourteen, kept a shorthand record of some of the pastor's teachings.³² For nearly three hundred years these remained but an unsolved puzzle, but recently they have been entirely decoded and are most illuminating. The texts were from the new testament; the sermons were of love. "We are in a new country," said Moxon, "and here we must be happy, for if we are not happy ourselves we cannot make others happy." Little of hell-fire and damnation emanated from the Springfield pulpit in those early days. Proselyting in the Connecticut towns by those having at heart the interest of Springfield, proved productive.

Into this atmosphere came Benjamin Cooley. It is fair to assume that he and his wife, Sarah, came in 1643, for at Springfield was born his eldest child, Bethia, on September 16, 1643. Whence he came is not known, but undoubtedly, in common with many others, it was via some one of the Connecticut towns. It could hardly have been otherwise, for all approach to Springfield was then by water. Romanticists love to perpetuate a fable of a Bay Path over which the early settlers are said to have made their way to Springfield, but local records do not even mention such a way until November, 1646. In November, 1645, such an experienced traveler as John Winthrop, Junior, undertook a land journey from Boston to Springfield, but succeeded only after great effort.³³ No prospective settler, transporting his worldly possessions, would have undertaken such a journey when frequent and adequate transportation by water was readily available.

With the group arriving about 1643 came also George Colton who during the subsequent forty years was the inseparable companion of Benjamin Cooley. In 1649 they took the oath of fidelity together.³⁴ That same year they were jointly fined for keeping cattle under improper conditions.³⁴ In 1656, Colton and Cooley, with three others, were appointed to dispose of the lands at Woronoco.³⁵ In 1657, Richard Fellows petitioned the General Court for two hundred acres of land in the present town of Palmer and prayed that it be laid out by George Colton and Benjamin Cooley.³⁶ In 1664 a grant of twenty acres of land beyond Freshwater Brook was made to Colton and Cooley "in one piece, for so they would have it and would determine between themselves how they would lie."³⁷ That same year a committee of six, including George Colton, were appointed to lay out a road from Hadley to Windsor. One of the appointees "being not cheerful to attend the work, the town chose another in his room, which choice fell on Benjamin Cooley."³⁸ On April 29, 1668, the General Court appointed Colton a quartermaster in the county troop and at the same session confirmed Cooley as an ensign in the foot company.³⁹ In 1670, Colton and Cooley were members of a committee of six appointed to establish the town of Suffield.⁴⁰ For years these two men dominated affairs at Longmeadow. These are but a few of many similar incidents. Such a combination of circumstances could hardly have been merely coincidences.

For example, in the early 17th century there lived at Halifax, England, Matthew Mitchell, his wife Susan, and Samuel Butterfield. All three came to New England in 1635 on the ship James. At Springfield, in 1636, Mitchell and Butterfield were assigned homelots in an undesirable section⁴¹ and both were next heard of at Saybrook, where Butterfield was shortly after killed by the Indians. Mitchell descendants long wondered why these two men were so constantly associated until parted by death. The reason became apparent when it developed that the maiden name of Susan Mitchell was Susan Butterfield and that she was a sister of Samuel Butterfield. Blood is thicker than water.

George Colton is said to have married Deborah Gardner at Hartford about the time of his settling at Springfield. He named his second daughter Sarah. Is it possible that Benjamin Cooley's wife Sarah was a sister of George Colton? The relations between Cooley and Colton would seem to have been far more binding than a mere Damon and Pythias attachment. If the origins of George Colton could be determined they might shed an important light on the early life of Benjamin Cooley.

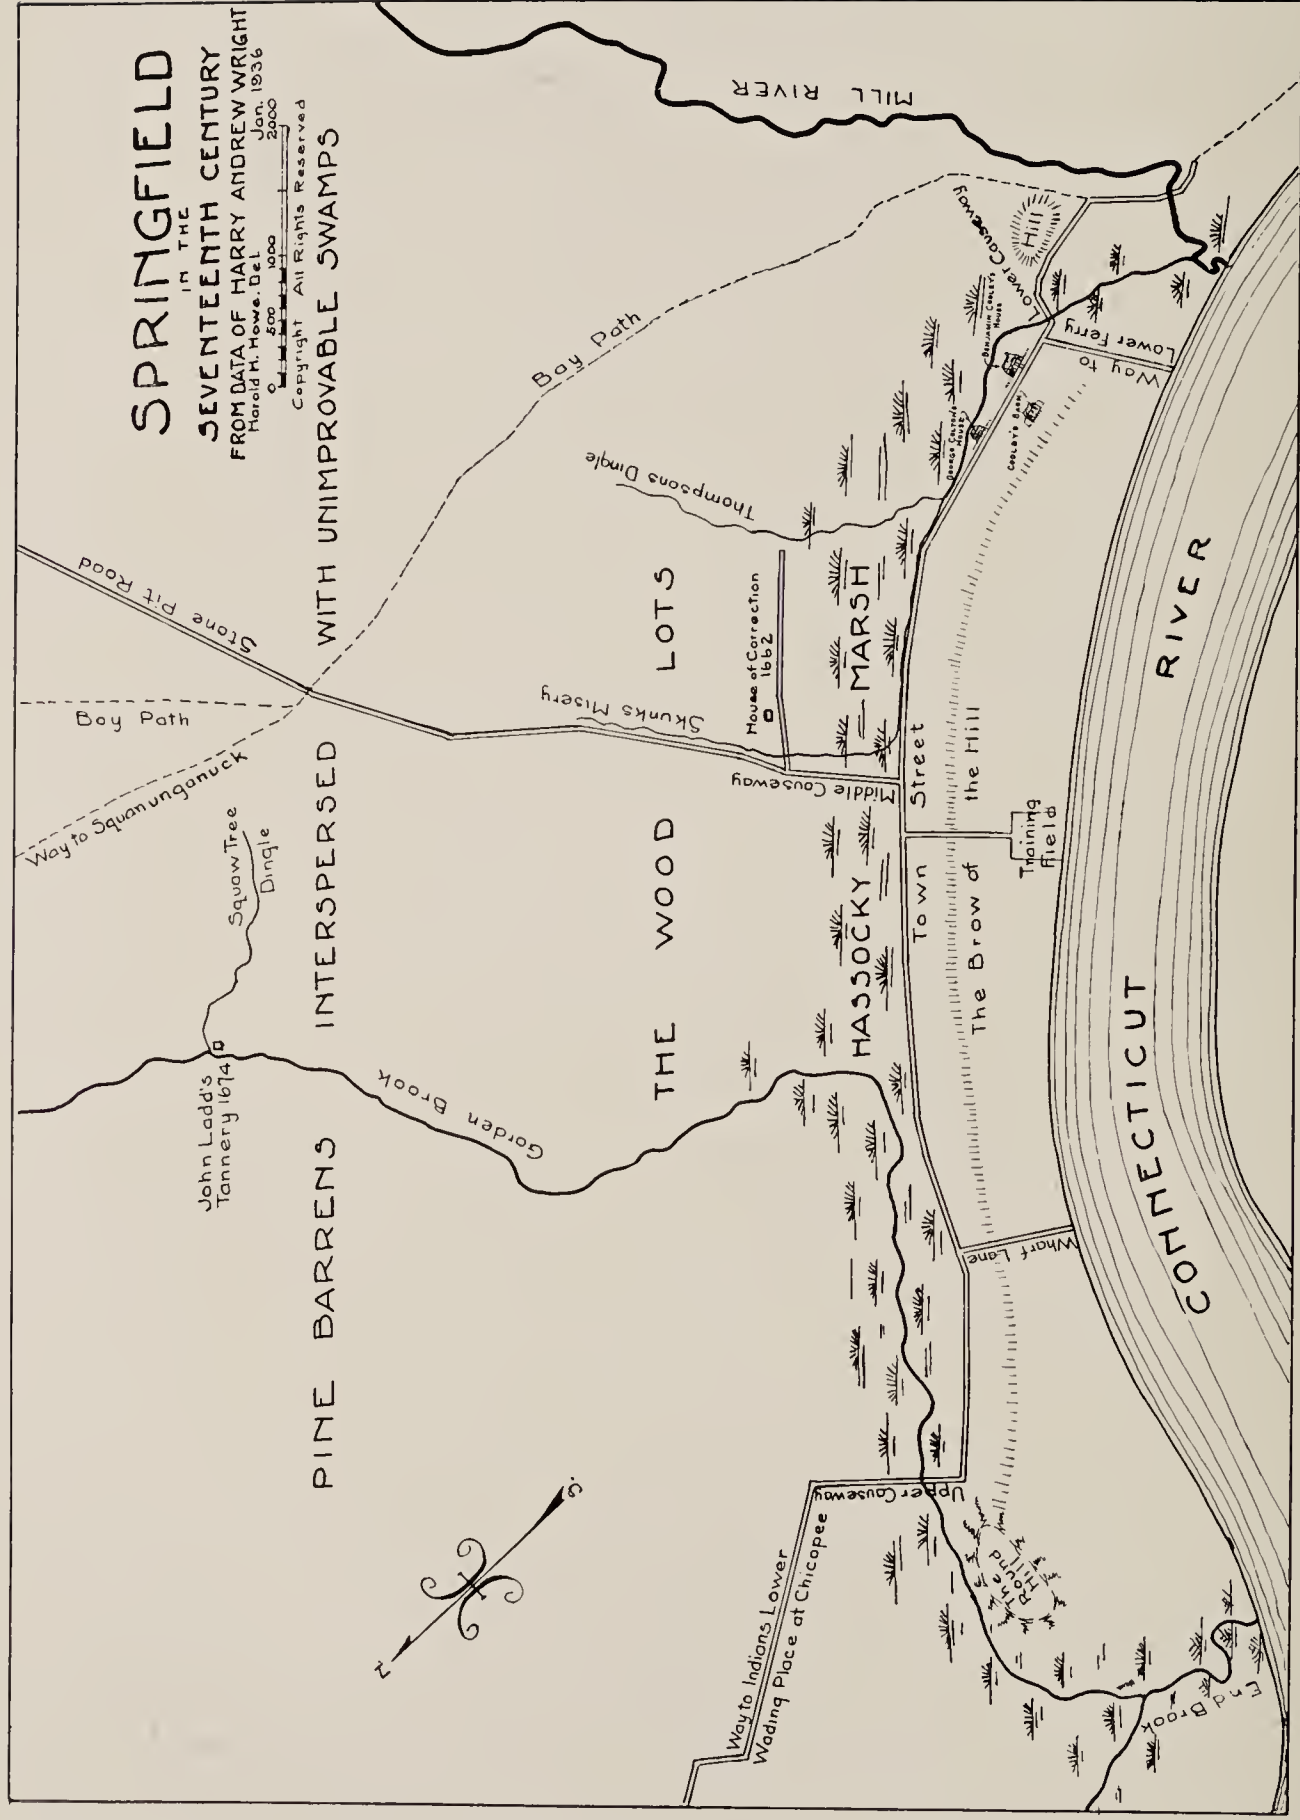

There seems to have been nothing precipitate in the nature of Benjamin Cooley, who appears to have always made haste slowly. One of such a nature would not have been apt to accept the first home site offered. A mere four acre strip of arable land from the street to the river must have seemed a pitiful provision for a family, especially if part of the tract was to be occupied by a house and its appurtenances. Along almost its entire length the town street followed the line of the marsh and the artificial ditch which became the town brook, and there seems to have been an official prejudice against the locating of buildings on the marsh side of the street. However, at the south end of the town, the brook turned off to the east for the breadth of six or seven lots, sufficiently to provide a sizeable plot of hard ground east of the street. Cooley was a desirable prospect; one to be encouraged. Therefore on February 23, 1643/44 it, was "ordered and voted that there shall be no barns nor any other housing set up betwixt the street fence and the brook except they have four rod for the highway."⁴² Thus Cooley's objections were met and he chose the third lot from the south, where the brook course provided the minimum of marsh. East of the street he built his house. At the rear of it was the clear running natural brook. Across the street was his barn.

Three lots to the north was a site offering similar advantages and this was chosen by George Colton who also established himself on the east side of the town street.

After his permanent removal to Longmeadow, Cooley sold this property in the town plot to his next-door neighbor, Richard Sikes, on January 12, 1667/68.⁴³ Both the house and the barn were burned by the Indians in the sack of the town on October 5, 1675, so that nothing definite is known of them, but consideration of other buildings of the time provides a knowledge of their nature and construction.

It can be most positively affirmed that the Cooley house was not one of those log cabins, so beloved by poets and painters, that actually were unknown in pioneer New England. An Englishman, coming to America in the early 17th century, would have had about as much knowledge of a log house as he would have had of an Esquimau igloo—and no more. He simply would never have heard of such a thing. In any event, lack of material would have prohibited such wasteful construction for, contrary to general thought, southern New England was then not one huge forest but was an expanse almost entirely of great open spaces, due to the annual burnings of the Indians. There is today, in Massachusetts and Connecticut, far more wooded area than there was when the Pilgrims landed. So scarce was timber about Springfield that the very earliest plantation order prohibited the cutting of a single tree on the town plot.⁴⁴ As the Indians were exterminated this unnatural condition corrected itself, but as late as 1699, Northampton was forced to consider ways and means for overcoming their great lack of firewood.⁴⁵

Springfield carpenters and builders planned and built in the English tradition the type of houses they had known in the old country. The home of Anne Hathaway at Shottery which has been made so familiar by modern photography well illustrates the type.

Rather complete details of the house built for the first minister in 1639 are of record.⁴⁶ It is shown to have been a two and a half-story building with an entrance porch, the second story of the latter being designed for a study. The roof was thatched and the walls were "wattled," that framework being covered with clay with a result not unlike a stucco house in appearance. The rods of the wattling were known as "wales" and the process of covering them with clay was called "daubing the wales."

Such construction was well adapted to the mild winters and damp summers of Old England but here the settlers found that this clay-stucco siding succumbed to the rigors of ice and snow, and for protection they were forced to overlay it with an outside covering of boarding. Continuous winter fires and hot, dry summers constituted a fire hazard that led to the early abandonment of thatched roofs.

Until the coming, about 1645, of Hugh Parsons, the brick maker and chimney specialist, chimneys were built after the English manner, in cob-house fashion of round sticks, daubed with clay.⁴⁷

The church of 1645 was of similar construction to the parsonage except that the roof was covered with hand riven shingles, eighteen inches in length.⁴⁸ Seven years later the outside was clapboarded.⁴⁹

⁴⁹ Burt, Vol. I, page 222.

Apparently the "daubed" house persisted for a considerable period for at the hearing in the witchcraft charges against Hugh Parsons, on March 17, 1650/51, John Lombard testified "that one day last summer he set a trowel and a stick which he used to hold to his clay when he daubed, on the ground just without his door; after which two Indians came in and presently went away again. When he also went out to look for his trowel, there was the stick, but the trowel was gone."⁵⁰ Thus the tools of the trade seem to have been in common use at least as late as 1650.

Diagonally across the street from the Cooley house was the home of widow Margaret Bliss. Across the street to the south was that of Hugh Parsons. Both of these were built about 1643-1645 and both were garrisoned during King Philip's war and so were preserved until the camera could make a permanent record of them, and thus is had a knowledge of the house of the period.

One can surmise that the first Cooley home in America was a substantial and commodious two and a half-story structure of half-timbered, clay-daubed walls. The materials undoubtedly came from his own hillside wood-lot east of the brook. There, with frow and beetle he probably rived his own shingles. Presumably the windows had casement sashes, with tiny diamond panes set in lead.

Benjamin Cooley came into the community at a busy time. In 1645 the first church was built and every inhabitant was obligated to give twenty days work to its furtherance (not twenty-three days as appears in Burt's transcript, Vol. 1, page 176). Here is meat for the statistician and the economist. Exclusive of William Pynchon and Pastor Moxon, there must have been forty townsmen who contributed their labor; a total of eight hundred days, or the equivalent of between two and three years of working days for one man. The maximum day for carpenters and similar workers had previously been set at ten hours. Thus, eight thousand hours of labor went into the fashioning of the church. It would seem that either tools were inadequate or labor was inefficient, or that the structure was far more pretentious than the recorded specifications indicate.

Within five years an attic floor was laid in the church, providing a chamber which was used by various individuals for the storage of corn,⁵¹ and the records show that on "December 28, 1653, it is granted to Benjamin Cooley to have the use of the meeting house chamber from the innermost side of the pillars to the end of the house and to enjoy it the first Tuesday in November next, in consideration whereof he is to pay seven shillings in good wheat or wampum by the first of November next."⁵²

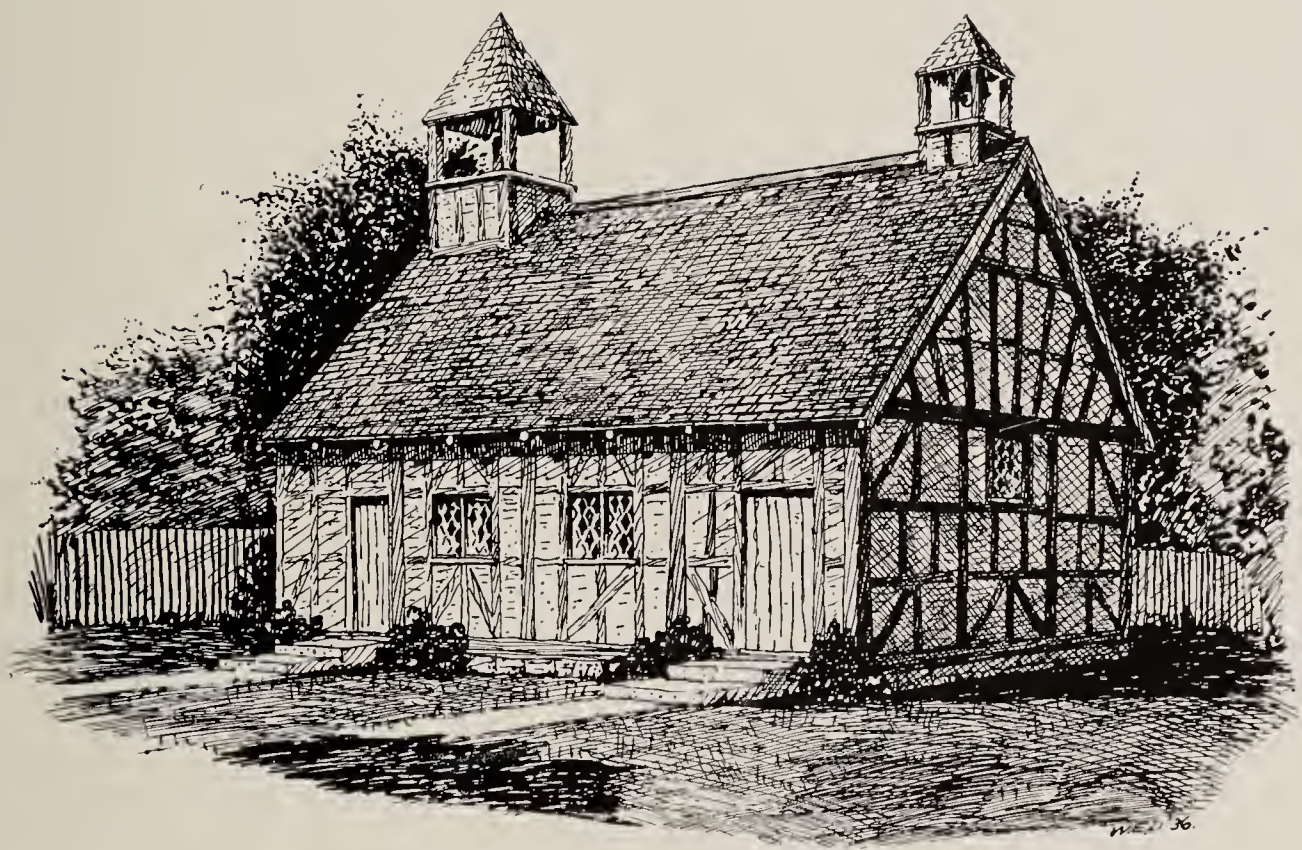

The earliest mention of Benjamin Cooley in the Springfield records is dated September 16, 1643, when his daughter, Bethia, was born. The next is February 8, 1643/44 when he was called for jury duty.⁵³ On September 23, 1645, a reference to fences indicates that he was then established on his property and that he was then the most southerly lot occupant, his later neighbors on the south not then having arrived.⁵⁴ From then on the records are replete with references to his public services, some of which must have been quite arduous. On February 8, 1643/44, when he served as a juryman in a petty case involving a pig, the group reported that "the jury having been held till near midnight hearing the plea and the proofs, desires liberty not to bring in their verdict until the next day, an hour before sun set."⁵³ Here is perhaps something significant and illuminating. Benjamin Cooley was then almost a stranger in town and it was his first experience with a local jury. It was a jury of six, the others being Thomas Cooper, John Dober, Richard Sikes, William Branch and John Harmon. Was it a Cooley insistence on justice that protracted the session until all arguments were heard, despite personal sacrifices? Was here first demonstrated a sense of justice that brought later honors?

In 1667, with Deacon Samuel Chapin and George Colton, he was in charge of the first local "Community Chest" for the distribution of "four or five pounds to help a little against the want of some families."⁵⁵ He not only had the confidence of the community but he seems to have endeared himself to all classes. The testimony in the Hugh Parsons hearing relates that at the Pynchon store he was "one that was liked." And it was to his neighbor Cooley that the bedeviled and harassed Hugh Parsons went for help when distracted with anxiety over his sick child.

On March 4, 1650/51, there died at Springfield, Joshua Parsons, infant son of Hugh Parsons and his wife, Mary Lewis. The available evidence indicates that the child succumbed to croup or some similar ailment, but the father was accused of witchcraft in connection with the death. He was examined before magistrate Pynchon and the testimony then given sheds such light on the homely affairs of the day that it is here rehearsed, in so far as it relates to Benjamin Cooley.⁵⁰

Hugh Parsons desired that Goodman Cooley would testify whether he was not affected with the death of his child when he came to speak to him to go to the burial of it. He said he could not speak to him for weeping.

Benjamin Cooley said that when he spoke to him to go to the burial of his child, he cannot remember any sorrow that he showed, for he came to him taking a pipe of tobacco.

Hugh Parsons said that when his child was sick and like to die, he ran barefoot and barelegged and with tears to desire Goody Cooley to come to his wife, because his child was so ill.

One can picture the poor, bewildered maniac, rushing across the street in the middle of the night, barefooted and night-shirted, pounding on Sarah Cooley's door and pleading for help, desperate because his child was choking with croup, while its mother was not a fit person to give it care. Perhaps in his saner moments he recalled the Goodwife's success with her own children.

Goody Cooley testified that this was at the first time the child was taken. There was some speeches used that it might be bewitched, for those that are now bewitched have often times something rise up into their throats that doth stop their breath and it seems by George Colton's testimony that the child was strangely taken.

Benjamin Cooley said upon oath that Mary Parsons told him above a year since that she feared her husband was a witch and that she so far suspected him that she had searched him when he had been asleep in his bed but could not find anything about him unless it be in his secret parts.

Benjamin Cooley and Anthony Dorchester said upon oath that being charged by the constable to watch Mary Parsons this last night, she told them that if her husband had fallen out with anybody, he would say that he would be even with them and then she found that he did bewitch his own child that she might be at liberty to help him in his Indian corn harvest; for he expected help from her and because her time was taken up about her child, he being eager after the world, seemed to be troubled at it and she suspected that he was a means to make an end of his child quickly, that she might be at liberty to help him. Another thing said she made her to suspect her husband to be a witch was that most things he sold to others did not prosper. Another ground of suspicion was because he was so backward to go to the ordinances, either to the lecture or to any other meeting and she had been feign to threaten him that she would complain to the magistrate or else she thought he would not let her go once in the year. Another thing that made her suspect him to be a witch was because of the great noise that she could hear in the house when he was abroad. And she said that last Tuesday, at night, when he was abroad, she heard a noise in the house as if forty horses had been there and after he was come to bed he kept a noise and a calling in his sleep, but she could not understand one word and so he hath done many times formerly and when she asked him what he ailed he would say he had strange dreams and one time he said that the devil and he were a fighting and once he had almost overcome him but at last he overcame the devil.

Jonathan Taylor said upon oath, March 21, 1650/51, that when he was at the house of Hugh Parsons this winter he told me that he had been at Mr. Pynchon's to get as much whitleather as to make a cap for a flail, and he was willing, but Simon Beamon would not let him have any. It had been as good, said he, he had. He shall get nothing by it; I will be even with him. Mary Parsons said; husband, why do you threaten the fellow so; it is like he was busy. He answered, if Goodman Cooley or any one else that he had liked had come, he should have had it. But I'll remember him.

Jonathan Taylor on oath said that sometime this winter on a night, a pair of Goodman Matthews pales fell down with a noise and going out presently to see the occasion thereof, could not perceive anything. But going into his house again, it being very dark, Hugh Parsons was at his back, his hand on his door as soon as his was, he bidding him sit down, which he did, Parsons saying, Goodman Cooley's boy nothing but beat my calf. His master will take no order with him, but I will. Anon after, Goody Cooley came and inquired after her boy, whether this deponent had seen him, he telling her no. She replied, I sent him to Goodman Matthews a good while since and cannot tell what is become of him, and desired this deponent to help her look for him, which he did, in all the hay mows and out houses with whooping and hallooing for him but could not find him nor hear of him. At last she gave over looking for him and this deponent enquired of the said Goody Cooley whether Hugh Parsons had not met him and took orders with him and he threatened him for beating his calf. And after they were parted a while, the boy came home, and his dame asked him where he had been. He said, in a great cellar and was carried headlong into it, Hugh Parsons going before him, and fell down with me there, and afterwards he willed me into it.

This "boy" was of course not Sarah Cooley's son, but Samuel Terry whom Cooley had taken as an apprentice.

1645.⁵⁶ This being of such importance in the story of Longmeadow it is here given in full. No lots had then been assigned to Francis Pepper, John Burrall, James Osborne, Abraham Munden or William Jess. The two latter did not long remain a factor to be considered for they were both drowned in the Connecticut River on October 29, 1645. the alluvial expanse of the long-meadow, which in spite of all appeals had been sternly held in common for pasturage for nearly a decade. At the long-meadow were physical conditions quite similar to those in the town proper. In the town was a quarter-mile wide strip of hard ground by the river. East of it was a wet marsh extending easterly to the hill or river terrace. Undoubtedly this marsh was the remains of a prehistoric river bed. At the long-meadow was a riverside strip of arable ground though apparently of a lesser width. Between that and the hill to the east was another old river bed, which at that time was a series of bogs called "ponds." A photograph taken in the meadows today, with the river on the west, the marsh bordering the dirt road, and the hill on the east, would well represent Springfield three hundred years ago.

At a town meeting held May 1, 1645, it was ordered that Elizur Holyoke, Thomas Merrick, Francis Ball and Thomas Stebbins should "speedily take a view of the long-meadow and what other grounds they shall think meet for future distributions."⁵⁷

That they complied with their instructions to act "speedily" is evidenced by the fact that the following week (May 7, 1645) an abortive attempt was made to make a distribution of portions of the long-meadow among the townsmen, but strong opposition developed to details of the plan then suggested and all proposals were vetoed.⁵⁸

On May 19, 1645, an attempt was made to reconcile warring factions and it was agreed to divide the town into two parts, based on taxable wealth, those of the northern part to participate in a distribution of the Plain-field, north of the town, while those of the southern part were to share the Long-meadow.⁵⁹ The division came to be made between Robert Ashley and John Leonard, that is, at the present State street. The Book of Possessions gives evidence that no participation was had in the Longmeadow distribution of that date by Robert Ashley or those north of him, while John Leonard and all those south of him did share in it.

That was the birth of Longmeadow—the first distribution of those acres as far as individual propriety is concerned; and the following twenty-five individuals then became the original proprietors, in the order here named, from north to south. It is of interest how many of these grantees were heads of prominent Longmeadow families of after years.

As in the town, south of John Lombard's lot was a lot granted to William Pynchon on account of his mill, so at the long-meadow a lot was granted to Pynchon south of the Lombard grant. This came to be known as the "Mill lot" though there was no mill there. This grant seems to have been of fifty-two acres, making a total of $324\frac{3}{4}$ acres; just a fraction over one half a square mile, or about one third of the total area of the meadows. The section granted came to be known as the "Upper Field" and as grants were later made in the southerly section, that was called the "Lower Field."

One provision of the first attempts to allot the planting grounds of the long-meadow is helpful in determining the original location of the proprietors there. In the "disannuled" proposal of May 7, 1645, it was designed that the "allotments in the long meadow shall lie in this order. Mr. Pynchon's Mill Lot (i.e., the "dividend" accruing to the mill lot south of John Lombard's lot in the town plot) shall be laid out about the knapp of pines by the river side and so all other allotments are to lie in order upward as the house lots lie in order."⁵⁸

In some cases the location of dividends was decided by lot—a drawing of numbers. Otherwise allotments were invariably made in the order of the location of the grantees on the town plot. So universal was this custom that in the absence of other specification one may feel confident that this part of the proposal of May 7, 1645, was included in the final agreement of May 19. Many later transactions show conclusively that this is the order in which the long-meadow grants were made.

The following entries from the Book of Possessions being the key-pieces necessary for locating the earliest Longmeadow grants, they are here given verbatim:

John Leonard is possessed of a planting lot in the Longmeadow eleven acres and half, more or less, in length 60 rods, lying on the outside of the Longmeadow fence, homeward.

This eleven acres and one half is by John Leonard sold and fully passed away to Benjamin Cooley this 13th January, 1657/58.

Benjamin Cooley is possessed by purchase from John Leonard of eleven acres and half of land in the Longmeadow lying on the outside of the fence northward. Breadth, 32 rods, length from the Great River eastward 60 rods, bounded south by Thomas Merrick.

Thomas Merrick is possessed of a planting lot in the Longmeadow being 17 acres more or less, extending from the Great River eastward to the backer fence, bounded by John Leonard north, by James Bridgman south.

This 17 acres is by Thomas Merrick sold and fully passed away to Benjamin Cooley this 2^d day of February, 1658/59.

Benjamin Cooley is possessed by purchase from Thomas Merrick of seventeen acres more or less extending in length from the Great River eastward to the backer fence, bounded by the eleven acres above said which Benjamin Cooley is possessed of by purchase from John Leonard.

Also of fourteen acres next adjoining it on the south by purchase from Samuel Marshfield.

Thomas Merrick's deed in confirmation of a verbal sale made "many years since" is dated September 27, 1679 and describes the tract as being "a little below Ensigne Cooley's house and bounded on the north by the land which Ensigne Cooley is possessed of by purchase from John Leonard and on the south by land which was Samuel Marshfield's.

James Bridgman is possessed of a lot of planting ground in the Longmeadow, fourteen acres more or less extending in length from the Great River to the back fence east, bounded north by Thomas Merrick, south by Joseph Parsons.

This fourteen acres is passed away to Samuel Marshfield and by him passed away to Benjamin Cooley this 2d February, 1658/59.

[May 17, 1656] There was granted to Benjamin Cooley ten acres of land adjoining unto the parcel of land formerly granted to John Leonard, adjoining to the hither end of said meadow, provided the said Benjamin do allow a cart way of four rod broad.

Benjamin Cooley is possessed by the grant of the plantation of ten acres of land more or less lying on this side of the Longmeadow adjoining to the land which Benjamin Cooley hath bought of John Leonard, which lies on the south side of this ten acres and it is bounded by John Lombard on the north of it. Length from the Great River, eastward to the brow of the hill, there being a sufficient highway through it.

[September 10, 1656] There is granted to John Lombard the remainder of the land betwixt great hill and Benjamin Cooley's his lot above upperside, provided he be no detriment to the highway.

John Lombard is possessed of a parcel of land at the hither end of the Longmeadow, about four or five acres, bounded by Benjamin Cooley south, north and west by the highway, east by the hill and the way, bringing it almost to a sharp point on the north. The grant is upon condition it prove no detriment to the highway so that the highway is reserved forever to be sufficient what ever the river may eat out.

This lot of four or five acres is fully passed away by David Lombard to Obadiah Cooley.

Obadiah Cooley is by way of exchange with David Lombard, land for land, possessed of about four or five acres of land at the higher end of Longmeadow, bounded south by land that was Benjamin Cooley's, west and north by the highway and east by the hill, the highway to be allowed whatever the river may eat away.

Actual measurements determine that the Marshfield-Bridgman tract was well south of Cooley brook and that Benjamin Cooley acquired all of the meadow by the river, from far below the brook up to the last triangular five acre bit, later secured by his son Obadiah.

As first laid out, the southerly course of Springfield's town street ended at "the way to the lower wharf," now York Street, the town brook and the swamps about it making further progress to the south impractical. Quite early, a foot bridge was provided across the brook and the adjacent morass to give access to the corn mill on Mill river.⁶⁰ On March 9, 1642/43, "a bridge and highway to the mill, for the passage of carts and cattle" was ordered, necessitating the building of a corduroy road across the marsh.⁶⁰

Three years later, to make the long-meadow section accessible to teams, on January 8, 1645/46, Thomas Merrick and Joseph Parsons were delegated to "make a way from the Mill river to the Longmeadow" where allotments had been made the year before.⁶¹ Evidently the project was greater than anticipated, possibly because of bridging Pecousic brook, for on November 2, 1646, the supervisors were admonished to see that it was finished by the last of May, 1647.⁶²

The completed road, however, ended at the Longmeadow and it was only gradually extended to Freshwater (now Enfield) as that section became settled and a road became necessary. The town budget of January 30, 1650/51, included an item of "£10 to the cartway to the foot of the falls"⁶³ at Warehouse Point, so as to avoid the bringing up of freight by water, over the rapids and shoals.

In 1664, this section of road was established as a part of the county road from Hadley to Windsor, via "the lower end of Springfield to Longmeadow Gate and from the lower end of said meadow into Freshwater River (Enfield) so called, and from thence to the dividing line between the colonies" which was then twenty rods south of the warehouse at Warehouse Point.⁶⁴

Just as the bridge to Brooklyn is the Brooklyn Bridge, so the bridge giving access to Longmeadow was known as the Longmeadow Bridge, the bridge across the Pecousic.

Presumably, when in 1647 Thomas Merrick and Joseph Parsons completed "the way from the Mill river to the Longmeadow," such a bridge was included, for on February 13, 1656/57, George Colton was granted "about a dozen acres of land by the Great River side about three quarters of a mile below Longmeadow bridge betwixt the brow of the hill where the cart way now goeth and the Great River."⁶⁵

It evidently was a rather primitive bridge of logs which was so ravaged by the turbulence of the brook

as the snows melted in the spring that the bridge was later raised above the flood by stone abutments.

February 11, 1666/67, for the "carrying on the work of Long Meadow bridge, the selectmen did conclude that George Colton and Rowland Thomas shall, as soon as the snow is off the ground, go down and see where the stones may be had easiest and whether they must cart them or fetch them by boat and Benjamin Cooley and Rowland Thomas shall see to the carrying on the work."⁶⁶

In many New England towns, building construction was strongly influenced by an abundance of stone, but in Springfield it was equally influenced by an almost utter lack of it. The town proper, the meadows west of the Connecticut, and the long-meadow, were almost devoid of it. One exception was the red sandstone in the bed of Mill river, and at Pecousic, where there was a limited supply of stone too soft to be of great value and difficult to procure. With crowbars, beetles and wedges this stone was laboriously worked out for what value it had. At Pecousic the ledges extended well into the Connecticut. The late Everett H. Barney, who was intimately acquainted with the locality, often repeated stories of old people he had known as a boy, who told him that in olden days, in times of drought, it was often possible to wade entirely across the Connecticut on such stones. February 10, 1652/53, the selectmen gave to Rowland Thomas "liberty to carry away those stones he hath dug in Powscowsack river by the end of June next; no man to molest him in the meantime, but in case he leave any after that time, it shall be free for any man to take them."⁶⁷ February 12, 1660/61 Samuel Marshfield was granted land on the north bank of the Pecousic brook at its mouth, provided that any person might "have liberty to fetch stones from the flats in the Great River.”⁶⁸ Poor as was the product, it was about the only nearby source of supply.

The valley of the Pecousic is quite extensive, draining a considerable area, so that the turbulence of the stream in the spring necessitated frequent repairs to the bridge. On February 5, 1666/67, it was “concluded that Long Meadow bridge shall be made with stone on each side of the brook for the timber work to lie upon.”⁶⁹ April 24, 1685 “it was voted to allow Obadiah Cooley, Samuel Bliss, Jr. and Nathaniel Bliss, three pounds to repair the Long Meadow bridge in the country road, they laying five new sleepers of good sound timber and planking them with half trees and pinning them down with cross pieces and putting up poles by the sides of said bridge.”⁷⁰ March 13, 1693/94, “Longmeadow bridge being said to be very defective or to want a new one, this affair whether to repair the old bridge or to make a new one is left with Nathaniel Burt, Senr., together with the surveyors of the highways.”⁷¹ At the same time “Increase Sikes, Samuel Bliss, 3d, Samuel Ely and Daniel Beamon did desire of the town the stream of Pecousic brook to set a saw mill on and the low land for ponding and they promise to free the town from all charge as to maintaining Pecousic bridge,” and on April 11, 1694, their desire was granted. Thereafter the term Longmeadow bridge gradually gave way to Pecousic bridge.

This was the first use made of the power at that point but the use continued for some two hundred years. A saw mill there is shown on the 1831 map of Longmeadow.⁷² In Civil War days James Warner had a pistol factory there. Until nearly the close of the last century, the brick buildings of the Havemeyer papier-mache factory were a familiar sight and became the original Barney & Berry skate factory.

A knowledge of the four Longmeadow brooks, Cooley Brook, Wheelmeadow Brook, Longmeadow Brook and Raspberry Brook, is vital to an understanding of events there. All were such insignificant streams that one might walk across the meadows with no realization of their existence until he suddenly came upon them. Having no precipitous banks, it is doubtful if any of them except Raspberry brook were even spanned by bridges in the early days, when no provision was required for the chaise or stage coach of a later era. A mere farmer could far easier drive his ox-team through the shallow water than he could provide logs for a bridge. All of the 17th century descriptions of the highway traversing the meadow are confined almost solely to references to the width of the road in the span between Longmeadow gate at the north and the southerly end of the meadow. Bridges over "gutters" were spoken of but none were mentioned that can be identified with these brooks. Surely some provision for the care of such bridges would have been included, had they existed. During the entire meadow period, Cooley brook was not once mentioned in the records. Wheelmeadow was mentioned frequently but only once in connection with a brook.

Conditions were entirely different after removal to the hill in 1703, where the town street was intersected by the deep ravines of these water courses. They then became a noticeable and most annoying feature of the landscape; something to be reckoned with four-fold on a journey across the town. Thus they became known by familiar names.

On December 10, 1700, Isaac Colton was granted "twenty acres at Rasbury Brooke."⁷³ Prior to that, the stream had been known as Longmeadow brook, for on October 12, 1670, Samuel Ely was granted "six acres of high land below Long Meadow Brooke near the Great River."⁷⁴ Such a tract could have been adjacent only to the present Raspberry brook. This application is confirmed by the record of the establishment of the town of Enfield, August 24, 1681, the north bound of which was designated as being at "the mouth of Long Meadow brook below Springfield,"⁷⁵ and that was most definitely the present Raspberry brook. On February 5, 1683/84, Samuel Bliss, Jr. petitioned for "twenty acres of low land upon Long Meadow Brooke, beyond Barke hall, on both sides of the brook."⁷⁶ It is patent that this reference could be to none other than what is today known as Raspberry brook, or a closely adjacent confluent.

The 1831 manuscript map in the Massachusetts Archives explains this situation. Longmeadow brook, coming down through the ravine south of Bark Hall road, on approaching the meadow, originally took an oblique course south westerly and joined the present Raspberry brook, they becoming one brook designated as Longmeadow brook. At the point where the brook met the meadow, at Bark Hall, it was later artificially diverted north along the foot of the hill and then westerly to the river. The Longmeadow brook, in its present course across the meadow, is a man-made canal, the abandoned course being indicated by dotted lines and so designated. Hence the necessity for a name for the remaining part of the brook at the south, which was christened Raspberry brook and is still so known.

⁷⁶ Modern maps designate this as Bark Haul, but in the 17th century records there is no appearance of the letter "u." Present-day historians say that bark was hauled from there for a tannery. Murray gives two citations, both dated 1712, after defining a hall as 'a space in a garden or grove, enclosed by trees or hedges.' This 'hall' was a 'glade'; an open space in a grove of trees. Bark Hall may have been where tan-bark was processed.

It was the combined Longmeadow-Raspberry brook, the most southerly of the four meadow brooks, that was referred to on January 6, 1678/79, when there was granted to Jonathan Burt, Sr., "a piece of land lying over the country (i. e. public) bridge at the lower end of Longmeadow."⁷⁷ Reference to this same bridge and brook was implied when on May 21, 1680 "it was voted, that whereas, the bridge over Longmeadow brook was carried away or spoiled by the late flood, that a new bridge should be built in the old place."⁷⁸

The last definite reference to the meadow portion of Longmeadow brook in the town records was on February 5, 1683/84.⁷⁹ The first recorded reference to the depleted southern boundary-brook as Raspberry brook, was on December 10, 1700.⁸⁰ Sometime between these two dates the alteration in the course of the brook must have been made.

Early and frequent mention is found in the records of the Longmeadow Gate, reference usually being to the gate at the north end of the meadow. Some entries indicate that this was just west of the Longmeadow bridge at Pecousic brook while others seem to place it in the vicinity of Cooley brook. The situation defies satisfactory analysis, but the evidence is here presented for what value it may have.

The earliest reference is that of March 14, 1653/54, when it was "ordered that the proprietors of the field in the long meadow shall make a sufficient cart gate at the bridge over the long meadow brook."⁸¹ It is obvious

⁷⁹ Burt, Vol. II, page 262.

that this refers to the gate at the southerly end of the meadow.

August 27, 1660, "Thomas Gilbert hath liberty granted him for building and dwelling on his land which he hath bought of Benjamin Cooley at the Long-meadow Gate."⁸² Unfortunately this is valueless as there is no record of such a sale and therefore it is impossible to locate the tract.

February 19, 1661/62, it was "ordered that the highway from the town bridge by Thomas Bancroft's to Goodman Cooley's lot at the higher end of the Long meadow shall be four rod in breadth. It is to turn to the right hand on this side the first bridge and so there is to be made a bridge over that gutter to make the way more straight and to save charge of repairing those bad places where the way has usually been. Also the highway from the long meadow gate to the lower end of the Long meadow is to be four rod in breadth from the gate till it turns from the river into the lots and thence to the bridge it is to be two rod in breadth."⁸³

At that date Cooley owned up to the last five acre bit at the north end of the long-meadow. The foregoing would seem to mean that from the bridge in town to the Cooley tract the road was to be four rods wide. From the Longmeadow Gate it went through the narrow pass and turned southerly from the river to the Cooley lots and so through the meadows to the bridge at Raspberry brook. Through the meadows it was to be but two rods wide as hard land there was too scarce and valuable to allow of a greater width. All of which would seem to place the Gate at a point east of the narrow pass and close to Pecousic brook—which reasoning is flatly contradicted by other evidence.

The road-layout from Hadley to Windsor in 1664 mentions the Longmeadow Gate. The record describes

this portion of it as "from the lower end of Springfield to Long meadow gate, running where it now doth, in breadth four rods, and from the Long meadow gate to the bridge at the lower end of and by the river bank shall be in breadth two rods and from the lower end of the said Meadow into Fresh Water River, so called (Enfield) as the way now runs, four rods."⁸⁴

January 11, 1668/69, provision was made for payment to "Ensigne Cooley for maintaining the water fence at long meadow gate."⁸⁵

On May 28, 1679, it was agreed that "Benjamin Cooley would and should make and maintain the gate and water fence at the upper end of the Longmeadow for ever. Also, he shall have liberty, if he see meet, to translate that gate and water fence and whole cross fence, to the lower side of his son, Eliakim Cooley's lot, provided it be no prejudice to the field."⁸⁶

There is nothing obscure about that. Twenty-five years earlier, on March 7, 1653/54, Benjamin Cooley and George Colton had been appointed to supervise "a fence at both ends of the long meadow, betwixt the top of the bank down into the river, for the securing of the said field."⁸⁷ Cooley was now directed to build anew the fence across the highway at the upper end of the meadows and extend it far enough into the deep water of the river so that cattle would not go around it. If he preferred to build it where the fence and gate had previously been, that would be perfectly satisfactory. If he found it more convenient and economical to transfer it to another point, that would be equally satisfactory, provided there was no inconvenience to the public.

⁸⁷ Burt, Vol. I, page 228.

Did he remove it from a point near Cooley brook, to somewhere in the vicinity of Pecousic? Or vice versa? The records are not clear on that point. But there is an utter lack of reference to a toll gate.

Longmeadow historians have contended that the Longmeadow Gate was at a bridge where the highway crossed Cooley brook and that it was a toll gate for exacting a portion of the upkeep of the road from travelers between Hadley and Windsor. No evidence exists to support the latter contention. There is no reason for surrounding the Gate with the atmosphere of the entrance gate to a medieval walled city. Consideration of other gates about Springfield leaves one with the conclusion that the one at Longmeadow differed in no way from other purely farm gates, details of which are here assembled.

April 23, 1669, it was ordered that "for securing the gate way or bars by the meeting house, Benjamin Munn, Serj. Stebbins, William Warriner and James Warriner are to take care and charge thereof."⁸⁸

That same date it was agreed that "the gate at the higher wharf (now Cypress Street) being judged needful to be kept well hung and shut, that cattle may be kept from going to the river, it is ordered that all the neighbors from Deacon Chapin's upward shall take care of the said gate."⁸⁸

"And that something may be done at the lower wharf (now York Street) as to preventing cattle from pursuing the fields, either by making a gateway or otherwise. Anthony Dorchester is appointed to call the neighbors at the lower end of the town, to consider what may be advantageous."⁸⁹

As the long-meadow was adjacent and convenient to the dwellers at the southerly end of the town street, they participated in its distribution. In a like manner "the cow pasture to the north of End Brook, lying northward from the town" became the property of the more northerly of the townsmen, and became known as the Plain-field, now crossed by Plainfield Street. For the protection of the Plain-field a fence and gate were early established at Round Hill. January 31, 1672/73 John Pyncheon was "granted that little piece of land at the southeast end of Round Hill, provided a highway be left for passage to the Plain Gate."⁹⁰ This gate remained well into the past century. Henry B. Rice (born 1821) in his latter years related that as a youth he saw the fence and gate demolished for the opening of the new road, now North Main street.

In 1673, Obadiah Cooley and David Lombard, who lived on opposite sides of the Way to the Lower Wharf (now York street) had "liberty granted, for security of their own and the common fields to make a fence cross the highway to the lower wharf with a gate for passage through, who in consideration thereof, are to have the privilege of the herbage of the said way to themselves, so long as they shall maintain such fence and gate to secure the fields."⁹¹

One reference to a gate illustrates the diplomacy with which the Indian question of the day was handled. February 12, 1667/68, "it was ordered that whoever shall leave open, and not shut that gate by Thomas Miller's when the field is closed, he shall pay to the use of the proprietors of land in that field, the sum of two shillings and six pence. Only, what Indians are culpable that way, they are to pay six pence a time, to the use of Thomas Miller, which he is to get of them, yet so that he make no trouble or disturbance in gaining it."⁹²

Mention of a fence implied a gate, a gate where the fence intercepted a highway. Such a fence was in 1658

north of Cooley brook when John Leonard sold to Cooley his land there "lying outside the fence northward."⁹³ Adjoining that tract on the south were the seventeen acres and the fourteen acres Cooley bought of Merrick and Marshfield. These two latter tracts comprised the thirty-one acres listed in the Cooley estate inventory in 1684 as being "within the gate." Thus in 1658 and in 1684 the fence and gate were in the vicinity and north of Cooley brook and presumably were also there during the interim. If at any period they were at a point nearer to Pecousic brook, that period must have been prior to 1658. Quite possibly it was so at an early date.

Apparently occupation of the long-meadow was delayed for a bit after the first grants were made, for not until November 3, 1646, was Thomas Cooper "appointed to measure out the meadow ground in the Long meadow."⁹⁴

September 23, 1645, as "divers inhabitants have allotments of planting ground in the long meadow and some of them have manifested their desire to break them up the next spring and defend it with a sufficient fence against cattle but others are not yet willing," certain regulations were made as to common fences.⁹⁵

By the spring of 1648, activities had been carried so far that on March 1, 1647/48, George Colton and Thomas Merrick were chosen supervisors of fences for the district and on April 7, 1649, provision was made for general fencing.⁹⁶ On March 7, 1653/54, fences were ordered at both ends of the meadow.⁹⁷

It is impossible to determine just how early homes were built on the meadows, but certainly as early as ⁹³ Book of Possessions.

1649, as is shown by testimony in the Hugh Parsons hearing: "February 27, 1650/51, Sarah, the wife of Alexander Edwards testified upon oath that about two years ago, more or less, Hugh Parsons, being then at the Long Meadow, came to her house to buy some milk." Here is clear evidence that the Edwards family was living on the meadows as early as 1649.

March 18, 1650/51, George Colton testified upon oath that Hugh Parsons came into the long-meadow when his child lay at the point of death and having word of the death of it the next morning by Jonathan Burt, he was not affected with it, but he came after a light manner, rushing into my house and said, I hear my child is dead, but I will cut a pipe of tobacco first, before I go home. Hugh Parsons came to his house, he thinks, about eight o'clock in the morning." Joshua Parsons, the child in question, died March 4, 1651.

The Colton house and the Edwards house were both in the vicinity of the present Longmeadow brook. The latter was shortly after sold to Joseph Parsons and thereafter it changed hands frequently. There is quite a little presumptive evidence indicating that these were the first homes built in Longmeadow.

Occupation proceeded to such an extent that on March 7, 1653/54 it was "ordered that no inhabitant dwelling in the long meadow should suffer their swine to go at liberty in the meadow without rings," complaint having been "made against the dwellers in the long meadow that much spoil is done both in meadow and corn land."⁹⁸ On March 7, 1653/54 the selectmen ordered that "no householder in the long meadow shall suffer swine to go at liberty."⁹⁸

[December 31, 1660] George Colton desiring liberty to build on his land at the Long meadow, had liberty granted him for erecting a building or dwelling place there.¹⁰⁰

[March 13, 1660/61] granted to Benjamin Cooley, thirty acres on the east side of the swamp over against his house at the long meadow which land lies between two dingles and to run from the brow of the hill backward into the woods eastward till thirty acres be made up.¹⁰¹

This is the first recorded mention of a house in the long-meadow owned by Benjamin Cooley.

Just what was the intent of these building permits is a question, but there is reason for suspecting that they were often a mere whitewashing of a prior act, a legalizing of a condition already existing. An example is the act of December 26, 1678, when "all those persons who have builded up the ruins have their buildings allowed of."¹⁰² That of course was in the time of stress following King Philip's War, but it was not an uncommon custom even in normal times. As a whole, the permits give little information as to the actual date of building.

With characteristic deliberation, Benjamin Cooley seems to have been in no haste about removing to Longmeadow. His efforts in the town must have been greatly handicapped by the limitations of his little four-acre tract there, even though that was supplemented by ten acres across the Connecticut, and he would have profited by that experience. Though he did increase his nine-acre long-meadow grant to twenty and a half acres by purchase on December 4, 1651 from Reice Bedortha of the five-acre tract adjoining it on the north, and also the Griffith Jones six and a half acre tract north of the latter, yet the location seems not to have been to his liking for a homestead.¹⁰³ The witchcraft hearing testimony is evidence that in the spring of 1651 he still lived in the town and his deposition concerning the Parsons-Burt house suggests that at least as late as November 1651, he continued there.

However, on May 17, 1656, he received a grant of ten acres at the northerly end of the long-meadow¹⁰⁴ Adjoining it on the south was the eleven and a half acre lot of John Leonard's that he bought on January 13, 1657/58.¹⁰⁵ South of that was the seventeen-acre Merrick lot as well as the fourteen-acre Bridgman lot, both of which he bought February 2, 1658/59.¹⁰⁵ Thus he owned fifty-two and a half acres in one piece.

With amazing perspicacity and an uncanny appreciation of the future, on March 13, 1660/61 he petitioned for and received a grant of thirty acres on the highland east of his house "from the brow of the hill, eastward into the woods until thirty acres be made up."¹⁰⁶ On the same date, Thomas Gilbert was granted twelve acres on the north of this Cooley grant.¹⁰⁶ Gilbert sold to Marshfield who sold to Cooley.¹⁰⁷ Thus did the Cooley family acquire the forty-two acres of land on the hill at the north end of the present town street that was occupied by later generations.

This home-farm was rounded out by the grant on February 1, 1664/65, of seventeen acres of "pond" that lay "against his own land at the higher end of the long meadow, bounded by the brow of the hill,"¹⁰⁸ that is, extending from his meadow up the hill to join the thirty-acre grant of 1660/61. The combined area comprised $111\frac{1}{2}$ acres in one compact parcel, extending from the river eastward to the top of the hill and continuing easterly into the woods.

On the Leonard lot he built the home in which he lived for the rest of his life. That lot he bought in 1658. The first mention of his house was in 1661. At some time during those three years the house was built. His boon companion, George Colton, received his long-meadow building permit on December 31, 1660.¹⁰⁹ One can surmise that at that time Benjamin Cooley completed his plans and that the house was built about 1660.

Even then he must have considered the removal in the nature of an experiment, for though he rented his house in town to his neighbor Richard Sikes, it was not until January 12, 1667/68, that he actually sold him the town property.⁴³

For years the settlement continued in its own unobtrusive way. The handful of Indians were much in evidence on the street and in the houses; a pest to be endured. Real estate speculation was rife. Allotments were often sought solely as material for barter. Those intending permanent occupation of the meadows bought adjoining tracts of their neighbors. Grants were made of the swamps east of the meadow until eventually it must have been about all parceled out. Various attempts were made to drain the wet ground. Then, as now, ditches were all over the meadows, but the result was rather negative. Today, the swamps are much as they were in the days of the Indians, a little more worthless, perhaps, for then they did at least produce cranberries. In 1683, Benjamin Cooley, as one of the last acts of his life, essayed a rather elaborate drainage project, digging a ditch "a little above his house that he might lay dry that low and wet land behind his house."¹¹⁰ As it crossed the county road he was obliged to give a bond providing security against any damage that might accrue. A vestige of that ditch can be seen today. In 1695, Ebenezer Parsons and Henry Burt gave a bond in connection with a similar drain in another section of the meadows, but it was all rather futile.¹¹¹

January 5, 1665/66, Nathaniel Burt, John Keep and George Colton were granted "ponds" adjacent to their lands.¹¹² February 1, 1665/66, Benjamin Parsons and John Bliss had similar ponds granted.¹¹³ March 5, 1665/66, widow Margaret Bliss was granted "so much of the pond as is at the end of her lot."¹¹⁴ All of these grants were in the long-meadow and all were made with the proviso that "the Indians be not wronged in their pease," referring of course to cranberries, the sasachiminesh that they had reserved in the deed of 1636. Evidently these grantees were acquiring cranberry bogs and it would seem that in the language of the day, a bog was a pond.

In 1648, William Pynchon had said of the Indians, "Until they have fully subjected themselves to your government, they must be esteemed an independent, free people."¹¹⁵ The wise mentor had long since left the colony, but his precepts were still a guiding factor in the town. This regard for the rights of the natives continued to the very end, for on February 26, 1672/73, Samuel Bliss, Jr., was "granted so much of the pond as is against his land in the Long Meadow, provided the Indians be not hindered gathering pease in the pond."¹¹⁶

That was the last of such entries, for soon after, during King Philip's War, practically all of the natives deserted the valley.

The seeds of the Indian assault on the town on October 5, 1675, had been long in the sowing. The Indian of bow and arrow, the Indian of Pequot War days, was the occasion of little alarm; but the Indian of powder and ball was a menace to be seriously considered. Though Colony law prohibited the supplying of guns to the natives, the law was but lightly observed.

In 1640 the widow of Thomas Horton was called before magistrate Pynchon for "selling her husband's piece to the Indians." She protested that she had merely "lent it to an Indian because it lay spoiling in her cellar. The Indian is suddenly to bring it again and he left about six fathom of wampum in pawn for it. She knew of no order against it and doth promise to take it home again. She cannot tell the Indian's name but it is an Indian of Aguam." She was ordered "to get it home again speedily or else it would cost her dear, for no commonwealth would allow of such a misdemeanor."³⁴ She, poor soul, was without influence, yet in 1659 the Worshipful Major John Pynchon, himself then a magistrate, had no hesitancy in boldly charging on his ledger for a gun that he delivered to Umpanchela, the Indian chief, in exchange for land.³¹ In 1656, John Pynchon, in a list of his personal tools at the shop of John Stewart, the smith, included "a tool for making Indian hatchets," that is, tomahawks.¹¹⁷ Thus they sowed the wind and reaped the whirlwind.

During the night of October 4, 1675, long after the settlers were asleep, a moccasin-footed messenger sped through the hamlet of Longmeadow. The Indian Totoe, of Windsor, impelled by "the great respect and many kindnesses he had received and for the love he bore"¹¹⁸ to the English, was making his way to Springfield with a warning of impending danger. Incited by King Philip's successes, Wequogan, the Hadley sachem, had the night before led by a winding path, with noiseless stealth, four score of his Indian warriors into the pali-saded village that the English had built for their dusky neighbors on the reservation on Long Hill. There they joined the score of local Indians. Hidden by the stockade, the leader postponed for a day the sack of Springfield for his scouts to retrieve from Hartford the hostages that the Springfield people had incarcerated there, and during the journey the native scouts had revealed their secret to Totoe, a Windsor Indian, a protege of the Wolcott family there.

The messenger, bearing the secret, hurried on.

Thus forewarned, three substantial houses in Springfield town were garrisoned and in them the settlers found asylum.¹¹⁹ One of these was at the lower end of the town, the home of Jonathan Burt, that had been built by Hugh Parsons. Further up the street, the house of the widow Margaret Bliss was chosen. Still further north was the impregnable home of John Pynchon, built about 1662, the first brick house in the Connecticut Valley, later known as the "Old Fort." At one of these three garrisoned houses, Ensign Benjamin Cooley would have been on duty while, by virtue of his office, Quartermaster George Colton would have been with the Troopers at the Hadley headquarters.

With the coming of the morning, Lieutenant Thomas Cooper and Thomas Miller ventured out for a parley with the foe, but both were shortly killed. Later in the day, Pentacost Matthews, wife of John Matthews, the cooper, was slain. Richard Waite and Edmund Pryn-grydays were wounded, the latter dying the following week of his wounds.

As soon as news of the impending disaster was brought by Totoe, word had been sent to John Pynchon, then with the Colony forces at Hadley, who brought his troopers to the rescue of his fellow townsmen before the close of the day, but he found his town in ruins.¹¹⁹

Throughout those endless hours the Longmeadow settlers watched the smoke of the burning town in utter helplessness. Though neither their lives nor their property were menaced on that fateful day, yet both watch and ward were kept in every household for many fearsome weeks.

At Springfield the Indians had destroyed not only the town saw mill but the grist mill as well, necessitating the carrying of grain ten miles to Westfield for grinding. Thus, three weeks later, on October 27, 1675, tragedy came again to these harassed people. The diary of the Rev. Edward Taylor of Westfield relates that "our soil was moistened by the blood of three Springfield men, young Goodman (John) Dumbleton, who came to our mill and two sons of Goodman Brooks (John, aged 18 and William, aged 20) who came here to look after the iron ore on the land he had lately bought of Mr. John Pynchon, who being persuaded by Springfield folk, went to accompany them but fell in the way by the first assault of the enemy."

The winter passed in a state of siege. Long unused implements were brought out and grain was ground by hand. There were anxious days and sad days. Three of the town's stalwarts died, due perhaps to the hardships of the times; Deacon Samuel Chapin on November 11, Nathaniel Ely on Christmas day and Elizur Holyoke on February 6. At Longmeadow died Lawrence Bliss, son of a gallant mother, Margaret Bliss. John Leonard was killed by the Indians on February 24, Pelatiah Morgan March 1, and William Hunter July 4. On October 31, 1676, the beloved Captain Samuel Holyoke died of exertions at the Falls Fight.

With the coming of the spring, Longmeadow folk gradually ventured out again. On Sunday, May 20, 1676, John Keep, with his wife Sarah and their six-months-old son, Jabez, started for Springfield. Jabez was born barely five weeks after the Springfield disaster and this was the first Sabbath they had dared attempt his christening. All was well through the street of the hamlet. They passed the last house, the home of Benjamin Cooley, and hurried on through the fearsome narrow pass. Just as they approached the bridge over the Pecousic, shots rang out. It was the end for father, mother and son.

With the death of King Philip, in August 1676, life in the valley became quite normal, though it was another seventy-five years before rumors of impending danger entirely ceased.

The year before the breaking-out of the Indian war, at a town meeting held at Springfield on February 3, 1673/74, "there being, through the favor of God, so great an increase of inhabitants in the plantation, consideration was had concerning want of room in the meeting house for convenient seating of people."¹²⁰ At a meeting on April 15, 1674, it was decided that the problem should be solved by the building of a new church, and that John Pynchon, Elizur Holyoke, Nathaniel Ely, Anthony Dorchester and Jonathan Burt should have charge of the undertaking.¹²¹ Then came the war.

The question next came up on August 24, 1676. Though the little church of 1645 had survived the disaster, it was most inadequate. Elizur Holyoke and Nathaniel Ely having died in the interim it was "ordered that Ensign Cooley and Samuel Marshfield should be added to the committee for the meeting house affairs, some of them being dead."¹²² They were directed to "treat with John Allis of Hartford, in regard to the town's poverty by reason of the war. If he will stay for his pay, then to get him to raise the meeting house as soon as may be." To this, John Allis agreed.

To the building of the first church of 1645, Benjamin Cooley had given his labor and his money. To the building of the second, he gave of his thought and his money, the younger men providing the labor in this case.

Then came the year 1679. Benjamin Cooley was growing old. Though in years he was but sixty-two, he had led an active and strenuous life and men aged early in those days.

At a General Court held in Boston, 28th May, 1679—In answer to the petition of Benjamin Cooley, ensigne to the Foot Company at Springfield, humbly desiring the favor of this Court, to lay down his place, being aged and deaf,—the Court grants his request. And when another meet person is presented, they will not be wanting to approve thereof.¹²³

It was nearly two long years before that “meet person” was presented, but on May 11, 1681, the Court confirmed Thomas Colton of Longmeadow as Ensign.¹²⁴

August 17, 1684, Benjamin Cooley died at the age of sixty-seven. Six days later died Sarah, his wife, the mother of his eight children. Five sons and three daughters they had brought to maturity. As one recalls the terrific infant mortality of those days, he realizes what an unusual type of mother Sarah Cooley must have been to have carried her entire brood safely through the dangerous period.

During his forty years in Springfield, Benjamin Cooley acquired a competence far beyond the average, while yet retaining the good will of his fellows. At his coming he acquired forty acres of mediocre land. At his death he owned 524 acres of the choicest. He had houses and barns to meet his own needs and those of his eldest sons. Of livestock, gear and equipment and the merchandise of his trade he had a sufficiency. The debts he owed, amounting to £9-16s-6d were more than offset by the £15-15s-2d due to him. The inventory of his estate totaled over 1241 pounds sterling, having a present-day value of perhaps $60,000.¹²⁵

As were all their contemporaries, Benjamin Cooley and his wife were interred in the ancient "burying place" by the riverside in Springfield, west of the church that he had helped to build. No stones marked their graves for no lasting stone was then to be had in the community. In the following century it was found feasible to bring from Middletown, Conn.,¹²⁵ a hard brownstone suitable for grave markers, but locally the seventeenth century knew them not. There remains today a stone that marked the grave of Mary Holyoke who died in 1657, but the workmanship suggests that the stone is actually of a much later date. The elaborate brownstone monument that marked the Pyncheon lot is known to be but a scant hundred years old, the monument itself being so dated.

There Benjamin and Sarah rested until the coming of the railroad. In 1849, to make room for the tracks, the remains of 2404 bodies and 517 markers were removed to the Springfield Cemetery on the hill that had been opened in 1841.¹²⁶ Dr. Joseph C. Pyncheon, who then had charge of the removal of the Pyncheon bodies, said thirty-six years later:¹²⁷

Beneath the Mary Holyoke stone, dated 1657, deep in the white sand, six feet below the surface, were found the remains of two, lying side by side, with no others in close proximity. Is it too much to conjecture that these were the remains of Elizur and Mary Holyoke? The sand was discolored and some few pieces of the skulls and other bones were found while even the nails of the coffins were wholly destroyed, their places being marked by the rust only, while no other vestige of the coffins remained. The few remains were gathered, which soon crumbled to dust on exposure to the air, and with the surrounding earth, deposited in the new cemetery.

Dust had returned to dust.

Nothing is known of the Cooley bodies, which in common with many others undoubtedly had wholly disintegrated, leaving not a trace. Such a condition indicates that the bodies were then not buried clothed, as today, otherwise some evidence might have remained. Pilfered shoe-buckles and buttons are frequently found in Indian graves as old as those, though it is of course true that the place of interment chosen by the natives would have been in a soil having far greater preservative qualities than the damp soil by the river bank. Clothing was then far too valuable to have been disposed of in such a way. Contemporary inventories include odds and ends of wearing apparel that one would now think fit only for a rummage sale. Rural New England people can recall the times when a man would be deposited in his coffin, lacking shoes and trousers. It was just a bit of New England "nearness." The absolute lack of identifying articles in the graves of the old cemetery indicates that the bodies were laid to rest, wrapped in a winding-sheet or shroud.

Death seems to have come suddenly to Benjamin Cooley for though he attempted to make a will, he did not live to complete it. However, it was carried far enough to indicate some of his wishes, and with a sense of justice worthy of such a father and with a consideration for the needs of each other the heirs divided the estate and carried on.

Longmeadow strove to make itself an independent community. In 1693 application was made for the right to establish a saw mill on Longmeadow brook¹²⁸ and the following year for one on Pecousic brook.¹²⁹ In 1694, "the inhabitants of Longmeadow desiring to get a school master to teach their children to read and write and so be exempted from paying to any such school master in the town, it was voted in the affirmative with the proviso that they pay their proportions with the rest of the town for a grammar school."¹³⁰ In 1695, application was made for the use of Pecousic brook for a corn mill.¹³¹

With the turn of the century there came to be an increasing interest in the lands on the high ground. Frequent applications were presented for grants variously described as on the hill, on the great hill, and on the plain.

"At a town meeting of the town of Springfield, January 29, 1702/03 the inhabitants of Longmeadow did present a petition that they would grant them land on the hill eastward of Longmeadow to build on for homelots." One of the reasons for the plea was that "by reason of floods our lives be in great danger, our housing much damnified and many of our cattle have been lost."¹³² It has long been contended that this was due to a disastrous flood occurring in 1695 but no evidence of there having been such a flood is presented. It seems strange that if there had been such an experience that the settlers would have waited eight years before taking steps to avoid a similar disaster. For fifty-six years the meadows had been inhabited during which time but one mention was made in the records of such an episode. That was in the spring of 1680 when "the bridge over Long meadow brook was carried away or spoiled by the late flood."¹³³ That bridge, however, was but a few logs over a brook that might have been carried out in the spring rains and does not of necessity have any reference to the river. In modern times the meadows are annually inundated but that may be entirely due to modern conditions.

Before the extermination of the beaver and the destruction of their dams on the upper waters there may not have been any such floods as are common today. On November 21, 1685, Increase Mather wrote from Boston to Rev. Thomas Gouge, pastor of an English church in Amsterdam, Holland, saying that "in Connecticut on August 13 there happened a dreadful flood. The water rose twenty-six feet in a few hours so that their corn and hay is almost all destroyed in those towns which border upon the river and the poor people there reduced to great extremities. The good Lord have compassion on them."¹³⁴ It may safely be assumed that by "those towns which border upon the river" Mather meant Windsor, Hartford and Wethersfield. Twenty-six feet of high water there must have meant flood conditions in Longmeadow. Evidence exists to show that the greatest flood in the valley, prior to the so-called Jefferson flood of 1801, began February 24, 1692, and did great damage.¹³⁵ Perhaps the older generations took such episodes in their stride, while the sons rebelled against repeated undoings, which doubtless increased in intensity with the years, as the natural conditions were altered. Until further evidence becomes available, some questions must remain unanswered.

In any event, at a town meeting held March 9, 1702/03, "it was voted to give them liberty to build upon the hill eastward of said Long meadow."¹³⁶ That was the birth of the modern town, in the development of which the Cooley sons had so great a part.

CHAPTER V

Benjamin Cooley Source Material

In this chapter an attempt has been made to present, with as little comment as possible, all references to Benjamin Cooley found in the various authorities and original sources. The material has been taken largely from contemporary sources, which are given in connection with the references. These sources were chiefly the town records, county court records, state court records, the Pyncheon account books, and the Springfield Book of Possessions.

The divisions into which the material has been separated are those which seem most suitable. First are the chronological references to Benjamin Cooley which have little or nothing to do with land transactions. This part of the record is almost a biography of the man after his appearance in Springfield. Then the years of his service as a Selectman of Springfield are given. He had one of the longest periods of service on record. Next comes a chronological list of his land transactions, including many deeds, as well as all grants of land made to him by the Town. And finally, his will, inventory, and the record of the settlement of his not inconsiderable estate.

It is believed that the completeness of these references to an immigrant ancestor of the seventeenth century is unmatched in any family history. Rare, indeed, is so complete a record. The difficulties involved, the time, research and money required to assemble such a record need no explanation. To the initiated, these are obvious; to the uninitiated, an explanation would prove unbelievable.

They had as neighbors upon the Mill river side, Benjamin Cooley, Jonathan Burt, Hugh Parsons, and John Lombard; while to the north dwelt Griffith Jones and John Matthews. Five doors above was George Langton. In this remote part of the town the witch fever started. These houses were situated on the border of the wetmeadows, and it is quite likely that at times marsh lights were seen after dark. Mrs. Bedortha, at any rate, so asserted; and there were things happening in that part of the town, mysterious things, that were enough to make the cold moisture stand upon the brow of the bravest. 1650/51. Testified before William Pynchon in the hearing of Hugh Parsons, accused of witchcraft.

Benjamin Cooley saith that when he (Hugh Parsons) spake to him to go to the Buriall of his Child he cannot rember^{er} any Sorrow that he shewed, for he came to him taking a Pipe of Tobacco.

Hugh Parsons saith that when his Child was sick and like to dye he run barefoote and barelegged and with Tears to desyre Goody Cooley to come to his Wife, because his Child was so ill.

Goody Cooley also testifies that this was at the first Tyme the Child was taken. There was some Speeches used, that it might be bewitched, for these that are now bewitched have often Tymess Something rise up into their Throates that doth stopp their Breath: and it seemes by George Coultons Testimony that the Child was strangely taken.

Benjamin Coly saith uppon Oath that Mary Parsons tould him above a Yeere since that she feared her Husband was a Witch and that she so far suspected him that she hath serched him when he hath bin asleepe in Bedd and could not find Anything about him unless it be in his secret Ptes.

Benjamin Cooley and Anthony Dorchester say uppon Oath that being charged by y^e Constable to Watch Mary Parsons this last Night, she tould them that if her Husband had fallen out with any Body he would say that he would be even wth them and then she found he did bewitch his owne Child that she might be at Liberty to help him in his Indian Harvest; for he expected help from her and because her Tyme was taken up about her Child, he bein egar after the World, seemed to be troubled at it and she suspected that he was a Meanes to make an End of his Child quickly, that she might be at Liberty to help him: another Thing she said made her to suspect her Husband to be a Witch was most Things he sould to Others did not prosper; another Ground of suspicion was because he was so backward to go to the Ordenances, eather to the Lecture or to any other Meetinge and she hath ben fain to threaten him that she would complaine to the Magistrate or else she thought he would not let her go once in the Yeere; another Thing made her suspect him to be a Witch was because of the great Noyse in the Howse as if 40 Horses had bin there, and after he was come to Bedd he kept a Noyse and a galling in his Sleepe but she could not understand one Word and so he hath done many Tymess formerly and when she asked him what he ayled he would say he had strange Dreames and one tyme he said that the Divill and he were a fighting and once he had almost overcome him but at last he overcome the Divill.

Jonathan Taylor saith upon Oath, March 21, 1650-51, that when I was at the Howse of Hugh Parsons this Winter and he tould me that he had bin at Mr. Pynchons to gett as much Whitleather as to make a Cappe for a Flayle, and he was willinge. But Symon (Beamon) would not let him have any; it had been as good said he, he had, he shall get Nothing by it. I will be even wth him. Mary Parsons said, Husband why do you threaten the fellow so, it is like he was busy; he answered againe, if Goodman Cooley or any One else that he had liked had come, he should have had it. But Ile rember him.

Jonathan Taylor on Oath saith sometime this Winter on a Night, a Paire of Good. Mathews Pales fell doune wth a Noyse, and going out presently to see the Occasion thereof, could not p'ceave any Thing; but going into his Howese againe, it being very darke, Hugh Parsons was at his Backe, his Hand on his Doore as soone as his was of, he bidding him sitt doune, which he did. Parsons saying Goodman Collys Boy* Nothing but beat my Calfe, his Master will take no Order with him but I will; anon after Goody Coolly came and inquired after her Boy whether this Deponent had seen him, he telling her no; she replied I sent him to Goodman Mathue a good Whiles since and cannot tell what is become of him and desired him, this Deponent to help her look which he did in in all the Hay Mowes and out Howses with hooping and hal-louing for him but could not find him nor heare of him; at last she gave over looking for him and y^s Deponent enquired of y^e said Goody Cooly whether Hugh Parsons had not met him and took Order wth him, and he thretnd him for beating his Calfe; and after they were parted a While the Boy came Home, and his Dame asking him where he had bin, he said in a great Cellar and was carried headlong into it, Hugh Parsons going before him, and fell down with me there, and afterwards he willed into it.

1655/6, Feb. 8. In 1656 John Pynchon set out on a pork-raising speculation, on Freshwater river, now in Enfield, Conn.—at that time within the jurisdiction of Massachusetts. He procured a grant of land, 20 acres for himself, and 10 acres each for George Colton and Benjamin Cooley. When granted it was with the agreement that “if they doe not make use of it themselves it is to return into the Townes hands agayne—they are not to sell it to any other.” The sequel was not recorded until Oct. 8, 1660, when it appeared that Cooley had withdrawn, Pynchon taking his portion. . . . “the design of keeping swine there was accordingly caryed on. . . until Windsor corne fields eat up y^e swine.” This quotation is in the handwriting of John Pynchon, and what he probably intended to say was that the swine ran out of the Enfield woods in which they were fattening on acorns and other nuts, into the Windsor corn-fields, and not by being eaten up by the fields.* (Burt, Vol. I, page 237, see also pages 59/60, 280)

(Burt, Vol. I, page 245) [This committee disposed of the land in Woronoco in 4 parts on Aug. 9, 1656.]

1656, Mar. 24. The persons here unto chosen are mr Pynchon, Deacon Chapin George Colton

* Or perhaps John Pynchon meant the Windsor corn fields gradually were enlarged to such an extent that the 40 acres granted only for raising swine, and not apparently for private ownership, could no longer be used for that purpose, since it was needed by the Windsor settlers.

A tavern was actually built, but it was abandoned within a couple of years. Fellowes had been a neighbor of Benjamin Cooley's at Springfield. * "My understanding is that a troop was a cavalry company, while the foot company was the equivalent of the train band or a company of the State Militia in the modern organization. An ensign was what is today known as a second lieutenant, there being two to a company, each in command of a platoon. It would appear that Thomas Cooper, who was killed by the Indians Oct. 5, 1676, was the other ensign at this time. Though I have given the subject no especial study, I am confident that this is correct. It is quite possible that at this early period, when numbers were few, that there was but one ensign to a company, the lieutenant being in charge of the first platoon, the ensign of the second." Comment by Harry A. Wright, Springfield, Mass., 1939.

* Sumptuary laws restraining excess of apparel in some classes were common in England for centuries. Massachusetts enacted such a law in 1651, ordering that persons whose estates did not exceed £200 should not wear gold or silver lace, gold or silver buttons, bone lace above 2 s. per yard, or silk hoods or scarfs. Any persons wearing such articles might be assessed a tax on their property as if they actually had estates of £200. In other words, a person could not successfully plead for abatement of taxes if their attire indicated a position of affluence. The first attempt to have this law observed in Hampshire County was made in 1673, when at the March court 25 wives and 5 maids of Springfield, Hadley, Hatfield and Westfield were presented to the jury as persons of small estate who "use to wear silk contrary to law." At the March court in 1676, the jury presented 68 persons from five towns, "some for wearing silk and that in a flaunting manner and others for long hair and other extravagancies." One of these was Sarah Cooley. Why these people should have been so attired in such a time of stress, directly after the destruction of the town, is hard to understand. It suggests that in their haste to save their best from the flames on that day, these people had nothing but silk to wear. Comment by Harry Andrew Wright.

PROPERTIES OF BENJAMIN COOLEY*

The American system of recording real estate grew out of a great need. In England, such a system was unknown. There a purchaser received not only a written conveyance from the seller, but also the deed whereby the seller had acquired the property, together with all existing prior deeds. Such a chain of deeds might run back for hundreds of years. (In recent times, these old parchments have been so much sought by gold-beaters for their work that many muniment rooms have disgorged priceless historical material to be consumed by industry.)

In the seventeenth century in New England, strong rooms and fire-resistant buildings were so lacking that our system of recording land conveyance was evolved, with the thought that no one fire or no one thief would make way with both an original deed and the recorded copy as well.

The Massachusetts General Court early provided "that everie man shall have libertie to record in the publick Rolls of any Court any deed or Evidence legally confirmed, there to remain in perpetuam rei memoriam." From such beginnings grew the Book of Possessions, which recorded a brief abstract of land holdings that expanded into the system of recording complete deeds. Unfortunately for the historian, not until Jan. 2, 1647/8, was such procedure made compulsory in Springfield, and even then it was "more honored in the breach than the observance," despite the penalty involved. John Pynchon, the greatest landholder of them all, was perhaps the chief offender, though he seems never to have suffered through his carelessness.

At a meeting of the "Committee for graunting of lands" held December 8, 1664, it was charged that "Benjamin Cooley having had sundry graunts of land in the Town w^{ch} are not Measured whereby he is lyable to a fyne or the forfeiture of his lands as he shall chuse, he chusing the latter desires that the right in y^e lands may be continued to him: This Committee doth graunt him the full right & title to all such lands y^t were his by grant." Inasmuch as Cooley was one of the six members of that committee, and as such should have set an example to others, it can be understood how exasperatingly lacking the Book of Possessions is often found to be. Some individuals were so meticulous that the mapping of their holdings is a joy; with others, it is an impossibility.

In Springfield in the seventeenth century real estate speculation was a popular pastime. Central property then changed hands more times in a year than it now does in a decade. Every original lot-holder participated in future subdivisions in the common lands; not one "divident" (as it was called) to each individual, but to each lot. The owner of two lots received two "dividends," and so on in proportion to his holdings. Lots were sold subject to or not subject to future melon-cuttings.

These dividends were often treated not as capital but as income; something to be turned into cash and spent for present needs. As all was grist that came to Pynchon's mill, so all was merchandise that came to his store. Pins, needles, cows, real estate, were simply merchandise to him. Many a purchase, sale, or lease of a sizeable tract was recorded merely by an entry in his ledger. Small wonder that such carelessness bred a similar carelessness in his fellow-townsmen.

As time brought demands for a more methodical procedure, many a deed was executed and recorded for sales made "several years since." Thus came the deed of Oct. 1, 1684, from Thomas Noble to Obadiah Cooley for land at Skipmuck, which land appeared in the inventory of Benjamin Cooley's estate appraised at £57 (a present sum of perhaps $2500). Thus, also, the deed of 1679 confirming the purchase by Benjamin Cooley from Thomas Merrick "many yeeres since" of 17 acres of land in the long meadow below Ensign Cooley's house.

Few dividends slipped away from Benjamin Cooley, except as he made exchanges for property more useful and convenient to him. In 1647 he was taxed for 40½ acres, while the inventory of his estate in 1684 included 527 acres exclusive of the "land that Obadiah Cooley occupieth." This latter tract, at Main and York streets in Springfield, comprised perhaps ten acres, giving as a total, 537 acres acquired during Benjamin Cooley's forty years as an inhabitant of Springfield.

The following is a chronological list of grants known to have been made to Benjamin Cooley by the town of Springfield, together with property transaction records taken from the original sources. In the recapitulation taken from Burt (Vol. II, pages 214-329) some entries are duplicated.

CHAPTER VI

EARLY COOLEY HOUSES

The original house built by Benjamin Cooley in Springfield, Mass., about 1644, has of course long since disappeared. Not even a sketch survives. This house was located on the site of the present 537 Main Street in Springfield, between Broad and Marble streets. On the site of the barn on the west side of Main Street (No. 534) stood Thomas Goldthwait's pottery in 1766. A white frame house now stands on this barn-site.

After Benjamin Cooley removed permanently to the Long-meadow, he sold this original Springfield home to Richard Sikes, in 1667/8, and both house and barn were burned by the Indians in the sack of the town on October 5, 1675. In Chapter IV Mr. Harry Andrew Wright so well describes contemporary houses that one can well imagine the appearance and construction of the house built in 1644 by Benjamin Cooley.

The date of Benjamin Cooley's removal from Springfield proper to the Long-meadow cannot be determined with exactness. He acquired his first allotment of land there in 1645, but he did not build his home on this land, which lay towards the lower end of the meadow. During 1656, 1657 and 1658 he purchased the land in the meadow upon which his house and orchards stood. It can safely be said that Benjamin Cooley built his house in the Long-meadow about 1660. The first reference in the town records to a house owned by him there is March 13, 1660/61.

Documentary evidence relating to the Long-meadow house is wholly lacking. It was probably far less substantial than the Springfield house, which he rented and later sold to Richard Sikes, for the occupation of the meadows was of an experimental nature and until time proved that such occupation was desirable, the settlers would have been wary of incurring inordinate expense.

The oldest Cooley house of which a picture survives is one which was built about 1660. The picture itself and the location of the house make an interesting story. When Mr. Harry Andrew Wright of Springfield became interested in the historical material sought by Dean Mortimer E. Cooley for this genealogy, he recalled an old Cooley house which he had seen and studied for its architectural style many years ago, and eventually he located the two old photographs here reproduced. On the back of one was written, "The old Cooley House in Longmeadow, 1888." On the other was written, "Road to the old Cooley House in Longmeadow, 1888." Mr. Wright took these photographs in his boyhood, more than fifty years ago, in the days when glass plates were developed in an almost airtight closet by a kerosene lamp having a bit of red glass. Early camera fans in Springfield took a train for a ten-mile ride to Holyoke and returned with great sheets of rag paper, which they albumenized and sensitized, printed and developed. The fact that pictures in those days were so much trouble to get and to develop probably led to their being prized and preserved.

When Mr. Wright found these old photographs, of a house which no longer survives, he recalled almost exactly where the house stood, and how he had reached it. He drove up Pecousic Hill and turned west on a dirt road, just about where the present Springfield line is. That dirt road is probably now the street known as Western Drive. When he recently showed the pictures to Miss Annie E. Emerson, "town oracle" on old houses and early history of Longmeadow, she immediately recognized the house and road as familiar to her, and recalled the grown-together tree at the left.

MEADOW, MASS.

When he told her how he had reached it, she said, "I know just where it was. It used to be known as the Samuel Cooley place. When I was a young girl his niece* lived there. She was called 'Miss Docia.' You need have no fear but that this picture is of the Samuel Cooley house where Miss Docia lived."

Thus we may feel assured that this old house stood far to the north among the houses which were removed to the hill from the Long-meadow after 1703. It is generally agreed that the houses were actually removed, and most likely they were removed intact. The whole procedure was probably a community enterprise, and with the pooling of oxen the job could be accomplished in short order.

This old house was probably built before 1667; for there was no saw mill in the community until then, and only riven clapboards were available, and the rear wall and part of the end wall were covered with the original hand-riven clapboards. The windows indicate an extremely early date of construction. The lower sashes have two rows of panes, while the upper sashes have three rows. Mr. Wright feels that Benjamin Cooley was the only Cooley of an age and with the means to build a house, in the period when windows of this type and riven clapboards were used. He feels quite confident from his historical knowledge and experience that this house was the one built on the meadows by Benjamin Cooley about 1660, the house in which he died in 1684, and the house which was later removed to the hill where it stood near or on the lot shown on the Centennial map of home-lots, to the north of the town, as belonging to Eliakim Cooley. Miss Emerson supports the opinion that Eliakim owned this house by recalling its ownership during her lifetime by a descendant of Eliakim², Miss Theodocia Coombes⁷, daughter of

* Granddaughter.

Theodocia Cooley and Samuel Coombes, and granddaughter of Samuel Cooley III⁵, No. 221 (*Samuel II*⁴, *Samuel I*³, *Eliakim*², *Benjamin*¹).

Since the house must have been owned by Eliakim Cooley's descendants, there is the possibility that it was built by Eliakim Cooley on the Long-meadow. Eliakim did not marry until 1678, and probably he built his house somewhere near that date. If the house were built as early as 1660, then it must indeed be the Benjamin Cooley house.

Benjamin Cooley willed his house to his two younger sons, Benjamin, Jr., and Joseph, with a life-time half-interest reserved for his wife Sarah. Sarah survived him only six days. At the time the will was written the three older sons, Obadiah, Eliakim and Daniel, were already established in homes of their own, for mention is made of the "houses which they occupy." Obadiah was living in Springfield proper, and Daniel and Eliakim were residing on the Long-meadow near the original home.

The Benjamin Cooley house was to go to whichever of the younger sons, Benjamin and Joseph, with whom his wife made her home. That son was to buy out the interest of his brother, who was to receive in addition two acres of land "above Daniel's house over the runlet of water." It is not known which of the two younger sons became owner of the original home, but judging from the home-sites on the hill after the removal, which correspond somewhat to the home-sites on the meadow, it was Joseph who inherited the old house which stood near Cooley Brook on the meadow. Joseph Cooley removed to Somers, Conn., about 1730.

On the other hand, according to the map of home-lots on the hill, Joseph, Sr., and Eliakim had the most northern home-lots of anyone on the hill. When Joseph removed to Somers in 1730, he may well have sold his property to his brother Eliakim. And he may well have removed his father's home to his northern lot, and turned over to his son, Joseph, Jr., the lot corresponding to the one on which the house had originally been located on the meadow.

Whether the house was built by Benjamin Cooley or not is largely a matter of conjecture. Its date of construction was very early, and it seems most likely that it was built by Benjamin in 1660, and removed by one of his sons after 1703, to a lot at the northern part of the new home-sites on the hill, and that it came into the possession of the descendants of Eliakim Cooley².

The earliest Cooley house known to be standing in Longmeadow is one built in 1765 by Stephen Cooley⁴, No. 19 (*Jonathan*³, *Obadiah*², *Benjamin*¹). It is a large, old-fashioned house, with the steep roof typical of its period. It is now (1940) occupied by James B. Williams.

This house was one of four Cooley houses built side by side. On the corner was one built by Josiah Cooley⁴, No. 209 (*Eliakim II*³, *I*², *Benjamin*¹). This house, No. 476 Longmeadow Street, is owned and occupied by Miss Annie E. Emerson. It was built in 1775 on the foundations of a smaller house which had been built by Josiah's father, Eliakim II. Josiah's brother, Hezekiah⁴, No. 211, built a "twin" to this house, just north of it. Hezekiah's house is no longer standing. North of it is the brick house built by Calvin Cooley⁵, No. 44, son of Stephen Cooley. Calvin's house was built in 1827, and is still one of the fine homes on Longmeadow Street. Its last occupant bearing the name of Cooley was Miss Mary Ella Cooley⁷, Calvin's granddaughter, who died in 1937 at the age of ninety. This house, No. 418 Longmeadow Street, is now occupied by her grand-nephew, Noah S. Eveleth⁹. The Stephen Cooley house built in 1765 stands just north of the Calvin Cooley house.

REVOLUTIONARY WAR RECORDS OF COOLEYS

IT SHOULD BE BORNE IN MIND, in considering the following list of persons in the Revolution, that frequently soldiers enlisted in the ranks of an adjacent state; therefore the record of service does not necessarily imply that the soldier resided in the state in which his service is given. In those cases where a town is mentioned, the individual probably resided in that town.

In each record given, the source of the item is indicated, and the full title of this authority can be found in the bibliography for this chapter, given in Bibliographies at the end of this book. It is recommended that the authority be consulted before any of these military records are considered final. The identity of the individual to whom the record belongs should be carefully verified; the similarity or identity of names should in no case be considered sufficient verification of an ancestor's military service. Pension Claims, etc., should be secured wherever practicable.

“... she knew, with a wisdom born in the blood of women, that this historic revolution was but a passing trifle compared with that Mississippi of births, marriages, . . and deaths which is the central and vital stream of human life. SECTION II

OBADIAH COOLEY²

2 OBADIAH COOLEY, oldest son and second child of Benjamin and Sarah Cooley, No. 1, page 195, was born Jan. 27, 1646/7, Springfield, Mass., and died there Sept. 3, 1690. He married Nov. 9, 1670, Windsor, Conn., Rebecca Williams, da. John and Mary (Burley) of Windsor, born Aug. 20, 1649, Windsor, died Oct. 18, 1715, Springfield, as Mrs. John Warner. After the death of Obadiah Cooley she married, as his 2nd wife, Nov. 26, 1691, John Warner. John Warner married (3) Sarah Ferry, a sister of John Ferry who married Obadiah Cooley's daughter, Mary Cooley³, No. iii below.

The earliest reference to Obadiah Cooley in the town records is that made concerning his assigned seat in the Meeting House in 1662/3, when at the age of sixteen he sat "Below y^e Pillars on y^e North Side." He was twenty-four years old when he married. It seems likely that he was a member of the militia organized in the raid on Springfield in 1675 during King Philip's War, for he was then nearly thirty years old; but no record of military service for Obadiah Cooley has been found.

In spite of statements to the contrary in The Longmeadow Centennial, neither Obadiah Cooley I nor Obadiah Cooley II ever maintained residences in Longmeadow. Obadiah Cooley I lived in Longmeadow, probably, during the years after his father, Benjamin Cooley, removed there (about 1660), until he established his own home, which was in the village of Springfield. Benjamin Cooley's other four sons lived in Longmeadow; Joseph the youngest son removed from there to Somers, Conn., about 1730.

The first grant of land made to Obadiah Cooley in 1664 (given as 1665 in The Longmeadow Centennial) was for 35 acres. From a description of this grant (Burt, Vol. I, p. 320), it is evident that this 35 acres was part of the division of the land between the present villages of Thompsonville and Warehouse Point, Conn. Obadiah never lived on this property.

The home of Obadiah Cooley was the tract bounded north by the "Way to the Lower Wharf," now York Street; south by Mill River; east by the way to the mill, now South Main Street; and west by the Connecticut River. Obadiah Cooley II occupied this same homesite. Concerning Obadiah Cooley II's homesite, the following identification of it as the same as that owned by his father is taken from the Town Records (Burt, Vol. II, p. 518). In 1700:

We who weare apoynted to look after the highways in this Towne being Informed that Obadyah Cooly had Incroached upon the high ways wee who weare apoynted did upon the 7th day of June 1700 take a vei^w of his s^d Obadyah Coolys fence and we did find he had Incroached upon the highway at the lower end of the Towne by his howse with in the gate† aboute one rod in bredth and for som rods in length we did therefore order him to remove his fence in unto a stake we set up right to the second post from his gate and so it is to run straight about a foot from the corner of his Barne, etc.

The Obadiah Cooley home lot is not so identified on Burt's map of early Springfield. On this map, the Obadiah Cooley property is divided into two properties, the northern section described as "Two lots each 22 rods broad, running back to Mill Lot granted to Samuel Wright Jr. and Roger Pritchard, sold to Thomas Bancroft"; the southern section is described as "The Mill Lot of 17 acres."

† This was the gate at the east end of the lane to the lower wharf.

In his will Benjamin Cooley gave to his son Obadiah:

al those Lands I bought of Thomas Bancroft of Springfeild which are Specified in that deed I have of him, and also al that Land I bought of the Worshipful Jn^o Pynchon, Esq. according to the ful extent of that Deed I have from him; also I give him all that land I bought of Goodman Gunn, now in Thomas Noble's Improvement, but in Case Thomas Noble shal upon demand without delay give my Son Obadiah a deed of his Land at Scipmup & divide it, yⁿ my Son Obadiah shal have that... etc., etc.

The deed for the Bancroft purchase has not been located; this seems obviously to refer to the property described by Burt as "Two lots each...running back to Mill Lot granted to Samuel Wright Jr. and Roger Pritchard, sold to Thomas Bancroft," since this is the property which adjoins the Mill Lot, purchased from Major John Pynchon by Benjamin Cooley in 1679, described in the deed as:

One parcel & his whole Lot that Lyes on the west side of the highway to the mil River & containes seven or eight acres more or less, & is bounded Easterly & southerly by the said highway, & westerly by the brook that Runs along by Obadiah Cooley, his Land.. And another parcel on the plot of ground where the old mil stood containing one acre more or less & lies on the westerly side of the brooke there & lies between Two parcels of Land of Obadiah Cooley; and the highway to the Lower Wharfe joins on the Northerly end of it:...

These two properties, purchased from Thomas Bancroft and Major John Pynchon by Benjamin Cooley, were the home property of Obadiah Cooley I, willed to him by his father in 1684, but occupied previously to that time, and becoming in turn the home property of Obadiah Cooley II.

Concerning the Thomas Noble Improvement lands which Benjamin willed his son Obadiah, Benjamin Cooley had said, "in case Thomas Noble shal upon demand without delay give my Son Obadiah a deed of his Land at Scipmup & divide it, yⁿ my son Obadiah shal have that." The Book of Possessions mentions no land owned by Benjamin Cooley at Skipmuck (Chicopee Falls), yet the inventory of his estate includes 60 acres there, valued at £57. Benjamin Cooley apparently had traded some land he had bought in Westfield from Thomas Gun, for some land in Skipmuck (Chicopee Falls) owned by Thomas Noble. That he had done so prior to 1673 is evidenced by the fact that in that year he was granted "Six acres of land joyning to y^e South side of his other land y^t is neere his son Henry Chapins" (husband of Bethia Cooley, Benjamin's daughter) (Burt, Vol. II, p. 245). This land was at Chicopee.

Immediately after Benjamin Cooley's death, Obadiah secured the deed to the property his father had willed him, and the following is dated Oct. 1, 1684:

Know all men by these presents that I Thomas Noble of the Town of Westfeild in the Colony of Massachusetts have divers years since (by way of exchange of Land at Springfield for land at Westfeild w^{ch} Ensigne Benjamin Cooley bought of Thomas Gun of Westfeild) Given granted bargained & Sold unto Ensigne Benjamin Cooley of Springfield late deceased, divers parcels of Land Lyeing in the township of Springfield afores^d & in that Tract of Land called Skipmuck in Springfield afores^d Therefore for the causes p^{re}mised & other good Considerations, I the s^d Tho: Noble do Ratify & Confirme my said gift, grant bargaine & sale of Land for Land unto Obadiah Cooley of Springfield afores^d the eldest son of the s^d deceased.

Eight parcels of land were included, an abstract of which is as follows:

- 10 acre homelot, 40 rods square, adjoining land that John Pynchon bought of Charles Ferry.
- 11 or 12 acres in the field Benjamin Cooley and Able Wright fenced in.
- 8 acres, next to the hill, 30 rods wide at the north end and 12 rods at the south end, bounded by a ditch, east by hill, west by Able Wright, north by the meadow lot.

10 acres next to Rowland Stebbins ditch, 24 rods broad at east end, at south end, 46 rods sloping to the river, bounded east by Able Wright, west and north by meadow.

4 acres, west side of brook, bounded north by Able Wright, west by Rowland Thomas, east by brook.

8 acres meadow, 80 rods long, 10 rods broad at south end, 22 rods broad at north end, bounded east by Able Wright, north by hill, west by brook, south by said Obadiah Cooley.

8 acres meadow, 16 by 80 rods, bounded north by hill, south by Able Wright's upland, east and west by Able Wright.

12 acres meadow, 25 by 80 rods bounded north by hill, east and west by Able Wright's meadow, south by Wright and said Cooley.

The eight parcels of land included in this deed of Oct. 1, 1684, from Thomas Noble to Obadiah Cooley, confirming gift of Benjamin Cooley to his son Obadiah, were all in the vicinity of the present junction of Carew and East Main Streets in the Skipmuck district of Chicopee Falls, where the Oxford Country Club now is. Part or all of this property was given by Obadiah Cooley I to his son Jonathan Cooley³. (For a photograph of the house built on this property in 1713 by Jonathan, see Family No. 8.)

section of what is now Chicopee Falls, where the Oxford Country Club now is. This property Benjamin Cooley had secured from Thomas Noble, in exchange for Westfield property Benjamin had bought from Thomas Gun. Concerning this property, Harry Andrew Wright, eminent historian of Springfield, wrote, in 1939:

Feb. 16, 1904, there died Mrs. George Gassner, born Sept. 28, 1819, a daughter of Chester Cooley (No. 83). In her widowhood she had been a domestic in the family of James D. Gill of Springfield, and had much endeared herself to young James Milton Gill, a boyhood friend of mine who later married my sister. In 1904, shortly after Mrs. Gassner's death, 'Jim' Gill asked me to go to Skipmuck and take some photographs of the Gassner house with which he had been most familiar, and which the old lady had told him had come to her from her grandfather, Ariel Cooley (No. 38), whose grandfather had built it. This I did, and apparently the two prints of the house I have are all that today exist. Mr. Gill was later asked by a local newspaper to arrange with Mrs. Gassner's surviving son, James C. Gassner, to permit a photographer to go to the then uninhabited house and secure some photographs of the interesting interior. This was arranged, but in the intervening few days a tramp made his way inside and, probably accidentally, set it on fire, so that it was entirely destroyed.

In recent years (unknown to me until quite lately) an intensive search was made for a photograph of the house that it might be included in a mural painting in the Chicopee Falls postoffice. As the search was in vain, I am confident that I have the only known pictures of it.

Fortunately it is comparatively easy to identify and date the house. On the very detailed large-scale manuscript map of the district made in 1827, it is shown and designated as 'the house of Ariel Cooley, deceased.' Therefore it only remains to determine which ancestor of Ariel Cooley built it. Just as in the reign of Charles II the English parliament placed a tax on chimneys, so in the reign of Queen Anne (1702-1714) a tax was levied on windows. To reduce this tax, the 'salt box' type of house was evolved, which, by sloping the rear roof to the first story, eliminated some of the windows of the rear wall. This seems to substantiate Mrs. Gassner's family tradition that it was built in the time of Jonathan Cooley, and one may feel confident that he built it for his bride in 1713, on land which had first been given to his father, Obadiah Cooley, by his grandfather, the first Benjamin Cooley. When built, it faced that very early road known as 'the way to Skipmuck' at the corner of 'the way to the Indian's higher wading place'; the ford where from time immemorial the Indians had crossed the Chicopee river when enroute to the present Hadley.

I unhesitatingly state that this fine example of a typical 'salt box' house was built by Jonathan Cooley in 1713.

9 OBADIAH COOLEY III⁴

(*Obadiah II*³, *I*², *Benjamin*¹), s. Obadiah II and Dorcas (Hale), No. 6, b. Jan. 9, 1704/5, Springfield, Mass., d. probably Brookfield, Mass., though death not found in Vital Records of that town. He settled in Brookfield and his children were born there.

According to The History of Palmer, Mass., Obadiah Cooley, Jr., and Sr. (referring to Obadiah II, No. 6, who removed to West Springfield in 1738, and Obadiah III, who removed to Brookfield) were joint proprietors of a 100-acre home lot bought by Obadiah III of Lamb & Co. in 1728/29. The slice of Palmer, called the Elbow Tract, which was incorporated into the town of Western, Mass., Jan. 16, 1741/2, included the farm of Obadiah III, which was No. 6 in the North Division in Western (now Warren, Mass.). Obadiah Cooley III owned 325 acres, and bought another 100 acres in 1732.

This farm was situated half a mile west of the Brookfield line, and was north of the land granted to Joseph Brooks about the same time. The Cooley farm was purchased by Joseph Blair, who occupied it in 1809.

Obadiah Cooley III was known as "Captain," probably because of his military services at Fort Dummer, Aug. 6 to Aug. 20, 1748, with Capt. Thomas Buckminster's Co.

He m. Apr. 24, 1734, in Lancaster, Mass., Martha Wilder, b. 1710, d. Feb. 12, 1768, Brookfield. They were married by Joseph Wilder, Justice of the Peace, who may have been the father of Martha.

10 NOAH COOLEY⁴

(*Obadiah II*³, *I*², *Benjamin*¹), s. Obadiah II and Dorcas (Hale), No. 6, b. Aug. 10, 1706, Springfield, Mass.; the date and place of his death have not been established. He was indexed as No. 10 in the list of the original grantees for the town of Palmer, Mass., where he owned 325 acres. He purchased 100 acres in 1728, which the Court granted to him in 1732. His land in the second division, granted in 1742, was later owned by Judah Ferry (1809), by Sylvanus Shaw (1850) and by George Robinson (1880).

According to The History of Palmer, Mass., Noah Cooley signed a petition to the General Court by the Plantation, "for tax relief and for no investiture of town privileges." The petition was brought about by the quarrel between the people and the minister, Rev. John Harvey, and it was signed Sept. 19, 1739.

In connection with selling a ministry and school lot owned by the town, in order to buy a farm for the ministry, Noah Cooley served on a committee Sept. 21, 1758. The report of this committee involved the maintenance of "Jean Hill's child in behalf of the town."

In 1764, Noah Cooley sat in "y^e 2nd seat of the Meeting House" in Palmer.

The date and place of his marriage, and information regarding his wife, whose name was Mercy, have not been found. She may be Mary Stebbins, b. Oct. 3, 1703, who m. July 5, 1733, Noah Cooley; this marriage preceded the birth of the first child by eight years, which is unlikely. No other Noah Cooley of proper age who could have married this Mary Stebbins is known, however.

THE HANCOCK LINE

(from American History Magazine, Vol. XXII, p. 447): ARMS: Or, a chevron catised between three griffin heads coupé sable, the two in chief respecting each other. In French patronymics, this surname appears in various forms, such as Balcoq, Billecoq, Velcoq, etc., its first syllable being derived from the given name: John through Hans, the nickname (Flemish) for Johannes, with the diminutive "coq" added. The family has been a distinguished one in England, where several branches are armigerous. Several persons of the name settled in Massachusetts in early Colonial days, one of whom was Nathaniel Hancock, mentioned below; from him descended the distinguished patriot, John Hancock.†

1. Nathaniel Hancock, one of the "First Company," was in Cambridge as early as 1634; he resided on the east side of Dunster Street, between Harvard and Mt. Auburn streets. He died early in life (about 1648), and his widow Joanna was appointed administratrix of his estate. There were 7 children:

† The ancestry of Nathaniel Hancock¹ is not given, nor is proof of his right to these arms cited in this article.

Mary, Sarah, Nathaniel, John, Elizabeth, Lydia, Solomon and Thomas, of whom further.

2. Thomas Hancock, b. about 1647, appears in Farmington, Conn., in 1670, then aged about 25. He was one of the original proprietors of that town, taking a prominent part in both civic and ecclesiastical affairs. He sat in the first seat in the square body of the meeting house. In 1691 he removed to Hartford, Conn., where he kept the jail. He m. Mar. 7, 1684, Rachel Leonard, da. John and Sarah, of Springfield. They had eight children: Thomas, John, of whom further, William, Rachel, Daniel, Abiel, Jonathan and Mehitabel.

On Nov. 14, 1785, Asahel Cooley of Albany Co., N. Y., at that time a yeoman, sold for £20, 10 acres in Skipmuck, Springfield, to his brother Ariel Cooley⁵, No. 38, b. 1756. The material on his descendants is taken from a newspaper clipping in a Columbus, Ohio, unidentified newspaper, headed "Central Ohio Genealogy Notes and Queries," Aug. 16, 1936, by Dr. Frank W. Gardner, and from a compilation of his descendants prepared by Rev. Charles N. Sinnett, Carthage, So. Dak. The Sinnett Compilation, date unknown, was based upon Cooley Family Bible data. Both sources have been augmented by correspondence with present-day descendants.

Asahel Cooley served in the Revolution, and was ever after known as Capt. Asahel Cooley. He came with his family to Belpre, Ohio, about 1797. They settled close to an Indian village in Licking Co., Ohio, but the family suffered from ague and fever, and determined to leave for a country of hills and springs. They united with the Buckingham family, and removed to a spot near Carthage, Athens Co., O., where Asahel Cooley was one of the first white settlers. They lived at a point about 16 miles north of where Athens now stands. The Buckinghams settled about a mile away. Each farm embraced two hills, and through the valley between the farms there ran a brook. The quite substantial home which Asahel Cooley later built became known far and wide as "The Brick House," and Cooleyville became a center of great hospitality.

Asahel, with the aid of his grown sons, cleared a large farm. He held many civic offices, among which were Justice of Peace and County Commissioner.

38 LT. ARIEL COOLEY⁵

(*Jabez*⁴, *Jonathan*³, *Obadiah*², *Benjamin*¹), s. Jabez and Abigail (Hancock), No. 18, b. Aug. 25, 1756, Skipmuck (Chicopee Falls), Mass.; d. Oct. 30, 1822, South Hadley, Mass. He owned considerable tracts of land around and in South Hadley, of which town he owned a great part at one time. He served in the Revolution.

Lt. Ariel Cooley was a man of note in his day. He was especially distinguished as the builder of Fairmount Waterworks at Philadelphia; he also built a dam on the James River at Schuylkill, Penn. He was engineer and first proprietor of the Canal and Locks at the Falls at South Hadley, begun in 1792. This construction involved 250 men in 1793, more in following years; by 1801 the works had cost $81,373 exclusive of tolls.

Lt. Ariel Cooley left an estate valued at considerably more than $85,000. He m. Sept. 27, 1781, Lydia Warriner⁵, da. Benjamin and Persis (Willard) of Wilbraham, b. Nov. 15, 1757, d. Sept. 13, 1839. She was a sister of Esther Warriner who m. Asahel Cooley, No. 37, Ariel's brother. For her ancestry see Esther Warriner⁵ (see No. 37).

Lt. Ariel Cooley, his wife, his daughter Lydia (Cooley) Chapin and others were buried in a small private cemetery at South Hadley Falls. About 1918 members of his family felt that this cemetery should be moved and the monument with headstones placed in the South Hadley Falls cemetery, which has perpetual care. Their lawyer said that the will would have to be seen before anything could be done, to find out if the land had been deeded to anyone, and at Holyoke a copy of the will was found showing, that Lt. Ariel Cooley had deeded the cemetery to his heirs. Thus it was possible to remove the bodies of the Cooley family, as well as some outside the lot, probably graves of friends and neighbors, to the cemetery with perpetual care. The iron railing around the family cemetery was not moved.

While a small lad, Zadock went to live during his minority with his uncle by marriage, Aaron Merrick, Esq., who married the sister of David Cooley II⁵, Margaret Cooley⁵ (b. 1736).

Zadock was a taxpayer in 1786 in Palmer, and served on a committee to seat the people at the meeting house for the ordination of Rev. Simeon Colton on April 8, 1811.

On October 3, 1808 a road was ordered from Levi Allen's distillery, east of Old Center, which manufactured whiskey from rye; this distillery was once owned and run by a company of which Zaddock Cooley was a partner.

The story goes that Cooley once loaded a hogshead of their production on an oxteam and started for Boston to exchange the same for money and groceries. Unfortunately, the team was upset on the road, the hogshead burst, and the liquor ran to waste. But he was no worse than his partners who shipped an invoice of the article via Springfield to Boston, and when received at Boston it was condemned and forfeited as being below proof (History of Palmer).

iii. SULLIVAN COOLEY⁷

s. Theodore Cooley, No. 57 above, settled in Nashville, Tenn., in 1836. The following is the biographical sketch of his son, Theodore Cooley⁸, taken from Vol. IX, pp. 111-12, National Cyclopedia of American Biography:

Banker and insurance agent, was born at Nashville, Tenn., April 3, 1842, son of Sullivan and Mary A. (Lanier)

Cooley. His father, who was the son of Theodore and Mary Emma (Boggs) Cooley, of Springfield, Mass., was born at White River Junction, Vt., but settled in Nashville in 1836. His mother was the daughter of Buchanan H. and Mary (Earthman) Lanier, early settlers of Davidson County. He attended school at Nashville until the age of 14, when he entered his father's wholesale grocery house. In 1861 he enlisted in the 1st Tennessee Regiment, C. S. A., under Col. (later Gen.) George Maney, afterwards commanded by Col. Hume Field, and at the end of twelve months, re-enlisted and was made quartermaster-sgt. of a County brigade commanded by Gen. Helm. While in this capacity, he was elected lt. in the 49th Alabama regiment, and later was appointed acting-quartermaster of a brigade of Ala. and Miss. troops on duty at Port Hudson. During the retreat of Hood from Tenn., and the re-entrance of the Fed. troops into N. Ala., he was captured and sent to Ft. Delaware prison, where he remained until paroled, June 24, 1865. He then resumed business with his father, but twelve months later went into the First Nat. Bank of Nashville, where he became cashier and a director of the bank. He resigned on account of ill-health, and formed the firm of Cooley, Wheelock and Reese, but was unable to give the business his personal attention. At the end of a year, a dissolution of this firm occurred, and in 1884 he took up the insurance business, becoming superintendent of the So. dept of the Guarantee Company of N. Am., with headquarters at Montreal. This position he now holds (1899), and in addition carries on a fire insurance business. Mr. Cooley's principal work in the interest of the public has been the establishment of libraries and the fostering of the fine arts. Having been elected a member of the Board of Education during his connection with the bank, in which he served 6 years, he was instrumental in collecting a library of 1,500 volumes for the "Ancient Order of United Workmen" in S. Nashville, which was afterwards turned over to the Howard Pub. School. Mr. Cooley is a mason of the highest degree, and much of his time has been devoted to the masonic library, to which he has made many valuable additions of books, curios, and engravings. He was appointed chief of the fine arts dept. of the Tenn. Centennial Exposition in 1895, and worked against many difficulties to secure a fine collection. In 1898 he was appointed honorary art commissioner of the Omaha (Neb.) Exposition, and "for services rendered" received a diploma and medal. He has also devoted much time to the building up of a library for Joel A. Battle Lodge, Knights of Pythias, of which he is a member. He was also one of the incorporators of the Howard Library Assoc. and of the Nashville Art Assoc. He is a Democrat in principle and in politics, and was a delegate-at-large to the sound-money convention at Indianapolis, which nominated Palmer and Buckner in 1896, but takes no part in politics in the common acceptance of the term. He was married in 1866 to Eugenia, daughter of Rev. Reuben and Lucy A. (Mann) Ford, of Henrico Co., Va.

66 LORENZO COOLEY⁶

(*Abner*⁵, *David*⁴, *Obadiah II*³, *I*², *Benjamin*¹), s. Abner and Maria (Chapin), No. 27, b. about 1800 in Connecticut, according to his son; he was in Chautauqua Co. in 1806 with his father, Abner Cooley. He d. Aug. 6, 1838, in Barry Co., Mich. He married in New York, and lived in that state until late in 1836. The records of his family and descendants were supplied by Eloda (Lavender) Shipley.

From the History of Barry Co., by Rev. A. H. Gaston, comes the following comment.

Rutland's advance-guard of pioneers was led by Lorenzo Cooley and one De Groat, who happening to meet in Hastings (Michigan) in the summer of 1836, while looking for a land location in Michigan, agreed to settle in the township now called Rutland, provided they could secure places to suit them. De Groat went out into the township to pick out a couple of farms, and soon returned, reporting that he had selected for himself 160 acres on Section 14, and for Cooley, 80 acres on Section 1, northeast of the river, bordering on the eastern shore of Long Lake. When Cooley came to look at his purchase he was not satisfied, and induced De Groat to let him have in exchange one of the 80 acre lots on Section 14. Thereupon Cooley and De Groat rolled up a shanty on the former's land, and De Groat, living with Cooley's family temporarily, began the task of girdling a few acres of his own preparatory to putting in a crop. While engaged in the work he fell sick, and died within a few weeks after beginning his pioneer life. His death took place in Cooley's house, and in the newly laid out graveyard at Hastings he was the first person to be buried.

Shortly after that occurrence (1838) Cooley so seriously injured himself in lifting heavy timber that, before the Hastings cemetery had received another occupant, he was laid there beside De Groat, with whom he had bravely penetrated the Western wilds, and with whom he put aside the burdens of a pioneer existence before that existence had fairly begun.

Lorenzo Cooley married, in New York State, Eleanor Rork, da. John and Maria of Cattaraugus, N. Y., where she was b. Apr. 25, 1809. She died Apr. 4, 1849, Rutland.

After the death of Lorenzo Cooley his widow was left with three small children on a farm that was still in a pioneer state. Meanwhile Estes Rich, who had entered land on Section 9 as early as March, 1836, had settled upon his land. Rich was the nearest neighbor to Mrs. Cooley, and he was two miles away. The Indians camped for the winter very near, in great crowds. Two weeks after Lorenzo Cooley died, Mr. Rich came to Mrs. Cooley's cabin and told her it was not safe for her to live there alone with her small children, so far from everyone, and that he would not make her the object of gossip by staying nights to protect her. He said, "I know you to be a good woman, and you know me for an honest man. We had better get married and take care of these children." They drove to Hastings the next day and were married. It was a most happy marriage, and the somewhat unique marriage proposal has been a family legend to this day. Mr. and Mrs. Rich had a child, Loren, born in 1839, who was without doubt the first white child born in the township of Rutland.

(*Horace*⁶, *David II*⁵, *I*⁴, *Obadiah II*³, *I*², *Benjamin*¹), s. Horace and Lucretia (Morgan), No. 55, b. Dec. 19, 1797, Springfield, Mass.; d. after 1887. His parents moved, when he was a few months old, to Hartford, Vt., where Francis lived for a while with his uncle, Theodore Cooley, No. 57. Then he left home, and went to Mississippi where he lived until 1856. He then moved his family, at great expense, to Santa Barbara, Calif., where he was Justice of the Peace and a man of considerable distinction. From correspondence he had with his sister, Mrs. Adaline Williams (iv, Family 55), he appears to have been a man of education and refinement, and of competent means. Copies of several of the letters were made, in 1888, by Rev. Frank Earl Cooley⁹ (No. 178), grandson of Francis' brother, Lucius Morgan Cooley⁷ (No. 98). One written in 1887, when Francis was 90 years of age, is particularly charming and interesting.

When Francis Cooley arrived in Santa Barbara, 1856/7, his was one of eight white families there. After the death of his wife, his daughter Mary looked after him; she married in 1877 at 45 years of age, and he moved to Sacramento and El Dorado County, Calif., and made his home with her.

He wrote of his wife, "She is part Indian, part Spanish; she has borne me 12 children, 3 of whom died as infants." He was a religious man, and his letters were filled with pious admonitions to the younger members of his family, whom he never saw after leaving Vermont in his youth.

12 Children⁸ (3 died in infancy, names not known; dates of birth estimated from correspondence; places of birth not known):

- iv MARTHA (twin), 1832; m. — Loomis; he was from Penn. They res. Santa Barbara; had 6 boys, 2 girls.

Thomas Cooley was reared and educated in Springfield; he purchased a farm in Southwick, where he died aged 53. His son Thomas J. Cooley⁸, No. 153, writes, "We wore cowhide boots in winter, and went barefoot all summer with one toe done up. We walked a mile to school, with our dinners in tin pails." Charles⁸ and Thomas⁸ were 12 and 14 when their two older brothers, Reuben V. and Samuel D., enlisted in the Massachusetts Volunteer Militia during the Civil War. Charles enlisted at Camp Banks and stayed there a week, and then decided he should receive a pension. Tom⁸ visited his older brothers twice with his father, and rode on a train for the first time. He reports that he had boiled rice with sugar on the trip, and remembered it as a remarkable treat; at home they ate rice with molasses, not sugar.

130 JAMES CALVIN COOLEY⁷

(*Alford*⁶, *Calvin*⁵, *Stephen*⁴, *Jonathan*³, *Obadiah*², *Benjamin*¹), s. Alford and Caroline Bliss (Saxton), No. 87, b. Nov. 5, 1838, at the Cooley Homestead, 418 Longmeadow St., Longmeadow, Mass.; d. Aug. 15, 1903, Westchester, N. Y., and is buried in the Longmeadow churchyard, where his gravestone reads, "Major James Calvin Cooley, Late 5th U. S. Cavalry, son of Alford and Caroline Bliss Cooley."

James Calvin Cooley was a commission merchant; he resided New York City before the Civil War, and afterwards in Westchester.

His military record is a distinguished one. He entered the U. S. service as First Sergeant in Co. D, One Hundred and Thirty Third Regiment, New York Volunteers, August 15, 1862; he was commissioned a Second Lt. Aug. 29, and a First Lt. Dec. 3, in 1862; he was a Captain May 28, 1864. He served in the Banks Expedition to New Orleans, in both campaigns against Fort Hudson, in the Red River Campaign, in the Sabine Pass Expedition, in the second expedition to Western Louisiana. He was Aide-de-Camp to General Paine, and served as Acting Assistant Adjutant-General to General Emory. He took part in the engagements at Biskand and Vermillion Bayou, and in July, 1864, accompanied General Emory, commanding Nineteenth Army Corps, to the Shenandoah Valley, and was in all the battles under General Sheridan, especially Winchester, Fisher's Hill and Cedar Creek. In Feb. 1865, he served as Aide-de-Camp to General Merritt, in the great cavalry raid of General Sheridan to the James River and Petersburg. He was with the Army of the Potomac until the surrender of General Lee. In May 1865, he was commissioned Second Lt. in the 5th Cavalry (Regular Army), and brevetted First Lt. and Captain "for gallant and meritorious services during the War." Was promoted to 1st Lieutenant, 5th Cavalry, July 28, 1866 (Extracted from "Roll of Honor," 7th Regiment, National Guard History).

Major James Calvin Cooley married in Longmeadow, Mass., Oct. 21, 1869, Agnes Medlicott, b. June 21, 1847, Enfield, Conn., d. Aug. 15, 1921, Ossining, N. Y.; bur. in the Longmeadow churchyard. She was the daughter of William G. and Marianne (Dean) Medlicott, of Longmeadow and of New York City.

In The Longmeadow Centennial, p. 302, we find the following, regarding William G. Medlicott:

It may not be generally known, outside of literary circles, that for several years of the past century Longmeadow enjoyed the distinction of possessing one of the choicest special libraries in the United States. This was the private library of William G. Medlicott, whose residence is shown in the illustration which fronts page 97 of this volume. This library, easily surpassed by many others in size, — about 20,000 volumes — was probably richer in rare books pertaining to the Anglo-Saxon and early English periods of our literature than any other in this country. Its linguistic treasures were well known and often sought by the professors of Harvard, Yale, Cornell and other universities, being freely loaned by Mr. Medlicott in the interest of literary research. Its sumptuous catalogue, printed for the use of buyers when . . . business reverses made it necessary to dispose of a part of it, is a remarkable literary curiosity. The opportunity was seized, at once, by intelligent collectors in London, Boston, New York, and other widely scattered places, and the sale of many of its choicest treasures, at advanced prices, demonstrated that even judicious book-collecting is not always unprofitable. Meanwhile the library itself remains apparently undiminished, in the family possession, and still also a mine of profitable literary research.

There follows, in The Longmeadow Centennial, a condensation of an article from the Springfield Republican regarding Mr. Medlicott himself.

The following biographical sketch is taken from Ohio Farm Bureau News, April 1939, which carries on its front cover a photograph of "Uncle George Cooley, Founder of the Ohio Farm Bureau." This particular sketch was chosen from dozens of newspaper sketches and editorials which appeared on the death of George L. Cooley, because it was prepared by his fellow workers, those who knew him best. It is reprinted in its entirety, with the permission of the editors.

UNCLE GEORGE GOES ON

“ and departing, leaves behind him — footprints ”

On a farm near the southern boundary of Dover Center, in Cuyahoga County, Ohio, where his grandfather settled in 1815 (1818), George L. Cooley was born on January 14, 1861. There he spent his boyhood and youth as he attended the Dover Public Schools and took part increasingly in the social and civic affairs of his community. There he made his life-long home and returned to it frequently from the work in public service which took him to all parts of Ohio and many parts of the nation. There, following a two months period of serious illness, he died, just before 7 o'clock, on Thursday morning, March 16, 1939.

The interest in improving the conditions and opportunities of his fellow men, which always dominated his thinking and efforts, began early in his life. As a youth he carried his part with earnest enthusiasm in numerous church, school, and community functions. From the Dover schools, he went to Ohio Northern University, and following his graduation there he returned to his home town for a decade of teaching and civic service.

RELENTLESS WORKER

The fullness of those early years, and the far-flung appreciation of men, who did not know him, for the relentless efforts that crowded the succeeding years, is succinctly presented in a tribute to him published by the Cleveland Plain Dealer in 1933:

“Cooley is still going strong as the champion of the farmer. As usual, sessions of the Ohio Legislature find him on the firing line, where he has been for years, directing the shooting of new bills into the assembly faster than they can be assigned to committees.

“In Dover, where Cooley's grandfather settled in 1815, Cooley is known as ‘Uncle George.’ He has been one of its most active citizens for years, in addition to his work for the farmers.

“He has been a candidate for Mayor of Dover, was defeated and not at all abashed. He has been a member of the Dover Council and a Dover Township trustee.

He led the Dover Congregational Church choir, and the Dover band. He taught for eight years at the old Osborn School, now Bay Village Community House, and later at the old Reed School on Center Ridge Road. He built many of the houses and barns in Dover and Bay Village.

"In 1915 Cooley called a conference of Cuyahoga County farmers to discuss their problems. During the World War he and four other men organized the farmers in 76 counties at the request of the State Agricultural Department. In 1918 he called thirteen County Farm Bureau presidents to a conference and organized the Ohio Farm Bureau Federation, and in 1919 represented Ohio at the founding in Chicago of the American Farm Bureau Federation."

Uncle George's activities in his home community also included service as a trustee of the Dover Library, and as a member of the Dover Planning Commission, which he helped to organize.

Shortly after 1900, Mr. Cooley became a general contractor, but for him building would not be confined to houses and farm structures. He soon interested himself in public improvements in general and road building in particular, and constructed the first improved rural road in Ohio — the Dover Center Road which passes his home. In 1904 he built the pavement of Neil Avenue through the campus of Ohio State University, in Columbus.

By 1905, Mr. Cooley was collaborating with the federal government on the problems and promotion of public highway construction, and during the next five years he helped organize the state highway departments of Ohio, Louisiana, and California. He then became state highway commissioner for the state of Louisiana, and served in this capacity until 1913, when he returned to Dover and subsequently became one of Ohio's prominent fruit growers.

Though his fine crops of grapes and raspberries were a paramount interest with him, Uncle George could not stop working with people to help solve their mutual problems. Soon he had called together his fellow farmers in Cuyahoga county and begun an organized drive for the common welfare, out of which resulted the first attempt to refund property owners for excess road assessments.

With the completion of federal legislation to enable extension service to farmers by land grant colleges, Uncle George was at the barrier to lead the organization of his fellow agriculturists and use the new facilities. The numerous conferences of 1918 and 1919 followed, and he served as chairman of the organization meeting in the latter year at which the County Farm Bureaus and local Improvement Associations then existing were united into the Ohio Farm Bureau Federation.

For several years Mr. Cooley served as organization director of the Federation, and later he served as legislative chairman. During this time many of the constructive steps in Ohio legislation for farm and city alike were achieved as the result of his suggestion and guidance.

SERVED TO THE LAST

Although he had been in failing health for three years, Uncle George was active in the institution he developed until the last few months of his life. He was a trustee of the Ohio Farm Bureau Federation from its formation till his death. He was president of the Farm Bureau Mutual Automobile Insurance Company and a member of its executive and investment committees, a director of the Farm Bureau Cooperative Association, Farm Bureau Life Insurance Company, Farm Bureau Rural Electrification Cooperative, and the Ohio Farm Bureau Corporation.

In recognition of his long service, the American Farm Bureau Federation, in 1937, awarded Mr. Cooley its second medal for distinguished service in agriculture. His funeral, held at the Dover Congregational Church on Saturday, March 18, was attended by hundreds of friends and fellow workers from many parts of Ohio and numerous other states. . . .

(If all the tributes paid to George L. Cooley on his passing, and in recognition of his accomplishments, were included in this genealogy, there would be little space for genealogical material. But the fact must be included, in this brief record, that he was tremendously interested in the Cooley genealogy, and in The Cooley Family Association of America. He attended the first meeting of the Association, in Springfield, Mass., 1936, and was immediately asked to preside at that meeting, which he did to the satisfaction of all. He accepted the office of vice president, and throughout the months of organizing, contributed thought and effort, and above all, faith in the ultimate success of an association of members of the Cooley family to achieve its many purposes. As Life Member No. 2, in spite of ill health, he attended the second meeting of the Association, at Niagara Falls, in 1938.)

133 ROSELLE CLIFTON COOLEY⁸

(*Pindar Field*⁷, *Calvin*⁶, *Noah II*⁵, *I*⁴, *Obadiah II*³, *I*², *Benjamin*¹), s. Pindar Field and Angeline (Pratt), No. 93, b. Jan. 10, 1857, East Windsor, Berkshire Co., Mass. He was called Roselle for a French college chum of his father. Late in 1859 the family moved to Pittsfield, Mass., which has been their family home from that time until the present.

R. Clifton Cooley, as his name came to be used, was educated in the public schools in Pittsfield. He entered high school at the age of eleven, continued two years, and having early evinced a talent for a business career, began at thirteen to earn his own living. He took a short business college course when he was fifteen. It was about this time that he decided his first name was "sissy," and dropped it for his second name.

R. Clifton Cooley was variously employed in country stores, where he once said he learned to sell everything from salt pork and molasses to silk dresses, besides doing accounting. At twenty he had already gained the knowledge of business and materials that boys begin to acquire at that age. This knowledge proved invaluable to him in all his later activities. In 1877 he went to Jacksonville, Fla., where he began as a book-keeper in a large hardware business. He was soon invited to become office manager and accountant in a wholesale grain establishment which was also the agency for a line of steamers to New York. In another year he was offered and accepted the position of book-keeper in a national bank; he advanced, successively, from teller to assistant cashier, and cashier. In 1887 he removed to Fernandina, Fla., and with some local associates established a successful national bank. In 1897 he was recalled to Jacksonville to assist in an unsuccessful effort to rehabilitate the bank there; in 1903, however, the bank was closed.

Mr. Cooley was then offered an accountant's position with a West Virginia coal company, operating five mines, and within six months was local manager; the concern was later acquired by a competing company with its own organization, so Mr. Cooley moved on to New York City, with an affiliated coal and iron-mining company operating plants in West Virginia and Virginia. In August 1906 he resigned to accept a position as travelling auditor for the largest sugar company in Cuba, controlling and operating twelve separate properties in different parts of the island. In February 1907 he was made Chief of Office of the sugar company's largest operation, near Puerto Padre, and continued there until 1909, when he returned to New York as office manager of the parent company's headquarters there. In 1911 he accepted a better paying position with a bond brokerage house in New York, but did not find their kind of work to his liking. He had retained the friendship of his former employers, the sugar company, and through them accepted the Chief Clerkship of an affiliated company in Puerto Rico, where he remained from 1912 to 1921.

On a vacation in the states Mr. Cooley contracted a severe bronchial affection, and on his return to Puerto Rico he found that the relaxing climate prevented full recovery. He therefore decided to retire, and returned to Pittsfield, where his mother, brother and sister still resided. Unable to remain inactive, he entered the real estate and insurance office of his brother, Fred A. Cooley, as an unsalaried employee.

Mr. Cooley has found time for travel and vacations, and has made extensive tours of the United States and Europe, Central and South America. During his years in West Virginia, he taught himself French, and his later Cuban and Puerto Rican experiences made him fluent in Spanish, which has facilitated friendships with high officials, in Spanish-speaking countries and especially in Mexico. In Florida he became intimate with the Cuban Revolutionary leaders of 1898-1902; indeed, his bank there was the depository for the enormous sums of cash they expended, and some of their vessel charters were made in his name.

Mr. Cooley is in excellent health (1939) and reports that he has not required the services of a physician since his return to Pittsfield in 1921.

24, 1890, San Francisco, Calif., where he is buried in the National Cemetery.

Francis M. Cooley attended school at Ball's Seminary, Hoosick Falls, and went to the Academy at Poultney, Vt. In 1857 he established himself in business at Reading, Penn., where he was living at the outbreak of the Civil War. He at once gave up his business and raised a company of Volunteers at his own expense for three months' service. He was commissioned and mustered into service Apr. 20, 1861, at Harrisburg, Penn., as Captain of this Company H, 5th Penn. Vol. Inf., and was ordered with it to Washington via Havre de Grace and Annapolis, Md. He participated in the advance into Virginia in May 1861, and was present at Marshall House, Alexandria, Va., when the proprietor killed Colonel Ellsworth.

On May 14, 1861, he was appointed Captain 11th U. S. Inf., and ordered to Boston to assist in recruiting and organizing the Regiment at Fort Warren, afterwards at Perryville, Md. In the early spring of 1862, the 11th Infantry joined the Army of the Potomac and was attached to the 2nd Brigade of Regular Infantry, afterwards the 2nd Division, 5th Army Corps. Colonel Cooley participated with his Regiment in the Peninsular Campaign, the Siege of Yorktown, the Battles of Wilderness, Laurel Hill, Spottsylvania, etc., including Grant's Campaign in 1864. He was slightly wounded several times, at the Wilderness and Spottsylvania; and in the assault on Petersburg, June 19, 1864, severely wounded. During the campaign commencing May 5, 1864, he was under fire for 24 consecutive days. He was also present at the Battle of Yellow Tavern.

He was brevetted Major for "gallant and meritorious services" at the Battle of Spottsylvania, and was brevetted Lieutenant-Colonel for gallant and meritorious services at the Battles before Petersburg; he was recommended for the brevet of Colonel by Major-

General R. B. Ayres, who reported: "Lt. Col. F. M. Cooley was distinguished in an especial manner under my own observation in the Wilderness on the 5th day of May, 1864. The 11th Infantry was one of the most distinguished regiments in the Campaign, and was commanded throughout it by Captain Cooley, and I consider him justly entitled to the brevet of Colonel." He was transferred Apr. 14, 1869, to the 16th Infantry, and resigned from the Army Sept. 1, 1870.

CHARLES LINCOLN COOLEY⁸, No. 158

Reminiscences

About the first thing that I remember was all of us children being in the Soldiers' Home at Davenport, Iowa, where Mother was caring for us. We stayed there about six months. From there we moved to West Point, Iowa, where I was in school two or three years. When I was 12 years old, Mother emigrated to Kansas. My brother Henry drove the team, and Caleb and I walked from Cantril, Iowa, to Alton, Kansas, driving our 14 head of cattle. We crossed the River at Nebraska City. At that place Mother joined us, as she had stayed in Iowa to settle up affairs.

She had worked in a hospital while she was waiting for us to come along. Our trip with the cattle took us about four weeks. Mother and brother Henry both took a Homestead between the two Solomon Rivers in Osborn Co., Kansas. There was no settlement on the divide where they located. The same day we arrived I started out to hunt up work. I found a job gathering corn about 14 miles from home, getting fifty cents a day. From that time until I was twenty years old, I worked out, and brought the money home to Mother.

Brother Henry farmed the Homestead, and brother Caleb worked out what he could, but he was never very strong. The first pay I got in Kansas was a quarter of beef. The farmer gave me a wagon and a pair of mules so that I could take the beef home. I started a little before sundown over the divide for the trip of 14 miles. There was no road or trail across the prairie until I got to the divide, where there was a ridge road. When I reached that, I was not sure which way to go, as it was now very dark. But I knew there was a stump down in the draw, and if I found that, I would be sure of my way. So I unhitched the inside tugs, and tied the lines to the wagon. On I went. But just as I put my hand on the stump I heard a lot of wolves begin to howl. I ran back to the wagon, unhitched the mules, and started back in the other direction. After going about four miles, I took another direction for home. Mother heard the wagon and thought someone was lost, so she put a lamp in the window. I had passed our Homestead. When I saw her light, I went quickly home to tell Mother she had lighted her own boy on the way.

After I was married I lived on brother Henry's homestead, and farmed that. By this time the country was beginning to settle up, and all our folks who came from Iowa would come to our place and stay until they got located. We lived in a dugout 16 feet square. Aunt Cal Tully, and Grandpa and Grandmother Vale stayed with us one winter while they built their dugout. Then Aunt Eva came back from Muscatine, Iowa, with her boys, Elmer and Omer (Underwood). She left the boys with us and attended school at Hartland, Kansas, until she got her certificate for teaching. (See Family, No. 118.)

About 1894 I traded a horse, a sow and pigs, and gave a note for $30, for a quarter section of land. Some years later we traded Mother's 80 acres for her homestead, which had a $300 mortgage on it. Shortly after that, Aunt Lydia Cooley⁷ (Family No. 78) came from Kansas City to live with us. She had been aided by the Buckinghams, but they had failed in business and she had no means of support. Mother told us to take care of her, and that the way we treated her would be the way our children treated us when we were old. She was 83 years old, and lived with us for three years. Shortly after she came we had a very wet spring. The dugout leaked, and a spring broke out under the floor. I went in debt and bought some land close by ours, where there was a small frame house with a good shingled roof, in order to have a good place for Aunt Lydia. This proved to be a good investment; the place had several acres of wheat on it, and we got a third share; in five months after I bought the place, I sold enough wheat to half pay for it. All through life I have found that it pays to help people in need, who are worthy of help.

Mother stayed with brother Henry (No. 157) most of the time, as he had a great deal of sickness. He was a good business man, but sickness and medical bills kept him from getting ahead. He carried $2,000 insurance in the Woodmen's Lodge, but because of sickness and hard luck was not able to keep up his payments. When the Judge told me they would have to suspend him, I kept him paid up for some 5 years. I never told him until one night when I sat with him when he was very sick. The great change that came over him paid me back many times for anything I had been able to do for him. He always cared for Mother in a wonderful way; her faith and her cheer never failed us; it shone on through all the hard things which the years brought us.

SECTION III
ELIAKIM COOLEY²

3 ELIAKIM COOLEY² was the third child and second son of Benjamin and Sarah (Cooley), No. 1, page 195. He was b. Jan. 8, 1648/9, Springfield, Mass.; d. there Dec. 1, 1711, aged 63. He m. Mar. 12, 1678, Springfield, Hannah Tibbals, da. Sergeant Thomas, b. Mar. 13, 1657, d. Dec. 16, 1711, fifteen days after the death of her husband, Eliakim.

Sergeant Thomas Tibbals was b. about 1615 in England, and came to America in 1635 on the "True-love." He was one of the first settlers of Milford, Conn. He served in the Pequot War, and in 1671 was granted 50 acres for his military services. His first wife was named Mary; she d. June, 1644, and he married a second wife, name unknown. He d. 1703, and his will was proved June 1 of that year. By his first wife there were two children, Mary and Samuel; by his second wife six children, John, Thomas, Mary (or Mercy), Hannah, who m. Eliakim Cooley, Josiah and Sarah.

Eliakim Cooley first appears in the town records of Springfield, according to Burt's History of Springfield, in 1662, when he sat "In y^t seate in y^e Gallery w^{ch} faces ag^t y^e minister" in the meeting house. He was then 13 or 14 years old.

He received his first allotment of land in 1670, when he was 21 or 22 years old. The following references to him are found in the town records given by Burt:

Eliakim Cooley was one of the list of inhabitants of Springfield who took the oath of allegiance in 1678, the year of his marriage. On Dec. 19, 1690, he took the oath of allegiance and was a Freeman.

In 1711 a Frenchman by the name of John Mallefuil was traveling through Springfield, and a severe snow-storm made it impossible for him to keep on. He stopped at Eliakim Cooley's home. He was quite ill, and after ten days died, Nov. 26, 1711. The following references to him are found in Burt's History of Springfield:

Not much is known of his history beyond the brief reference to him in the Town Records. It appears, however, from the records of the Probate Court at Northampton, that he was a trader who came here from Boston with his goods, and that he died at the home of Eliakim Cooley, after a sickness of ten days...

The amount of money, goods and personal effects left to the town was £229 12 s 7d...

Mallefuil, or Malleford, whatever his name was, made a statement as to his desire concerning the disposition of his property. John Sherman, the schoolmaster, testified: "Being at the house of Eliakim Cooley, Senr., tending of John Mallefuil, Frenchman, who being sick on his death bed, he being in his right mind, that his will & desire was that all his tenders and those that looked after him should be well satisfied & all charges & debts paid & the remainder he willed to the poor. He died November 26, 1711."

Benjamin Cooley testified: "Being with the man above written heard him say that he hoped what estate he had would make satisfaction to those who tended him for he thought they were the nearest unto him."

Daniel Cooley testified to the above writing, he then being present.

At the Probate Court, Jan. 1, 1712, "The above named John Sherman, Daniel Cooley, and Benjamin Cooley all appeared and made oath to their respective evidences above written, and do add that the deceased had been a resident in the house above said for the space of ten days before making said will, and that it was in the time of said deceased's last sickness, and that their testimonies were committed to writing within the space of six days after the making of the said will, which is allowed by the said Court."

The inventory of John Mallefuil's estate is given on pages 39-42, inclusive, in Vol. II of Burt's History of Springfield. Among the items of Expenses of Administration of his estate are:

To Sergt. Cooley for his time with the Judge	2 s
To Samuel Hitchcock & Jonathan Cooley	1 s 4d
To Sgt. Cooley for keeping the horse	6 s 6d
Eliakim Cooley's charge	3£ 10 s od.

After the estate became the property of the town, at a meeting held April 11, 1712, it was "Voted that Mr. Thomas Ingersol shall have the whole sum of money and goods mentioned in the inventory of the estate of John Mashfeld late deceased, for the term of one year, said Ingersol then paying the whole sum according to the inventory in money, and he also paying the lawful interest for the money part, provided also said Ingersol give sufficient security for the whole to the Town of Springfield."

On May 29, 1728/9, it was "Voted that the Selectmen Gett a good Handsome Toomb Stone, or Grate Stone and Sett up at the Grave of John Malliford Deceased, being the man that gave the money to the Poor of the Town."

On March 10, 1730, it was "Voted that there be paid out of the Town Treasury to Henry Rogers and Francis Ball the sum of twenty-five shillings for their service in bringing a tomb stone to be set up at Mr. Mallifords grave from Middletown."

The monument erected to John Mallefuil's memory is a monumental table resting on stone pillars, and stands along the Pine Street side of the Springfield cemetery, among those monuments that were moved there in 1848 from the first cemetery.

Within a month after Mallefuil's death, Eliakim Cooley, his wife, Hannah (Tibbals) Cooley, and his sister, Bethia (Cooley) Chapin, all died. It seems quite probable that Mallefuil's illness was a contagious one. Mallefuil died Nov. 26, Eliakim Cooley died Dec. 1, Bethia (Cooley) Chapin died Dec. 9, and Hannah (Tibbals) Cooley died Dec. 16, 1711.

(*Eliakim I*², *Benjamin*¹), s. Eliakim I and Hannah (Tibbals), No. 3, b. Mar. 19, 1680/81, Springfield, Mass.; d. there Feb. 25, 1758. He m. (int.) Sept. 14, 1706, Springfield, Griswold Beckwith, da. Matthew II and Elizabeth (Griswold-Rogers-Pratt), b. 1691, Lyme, Conn., d. Nov. 26, 1754, Springfield.

GRISWOLD AND BECKWITH LINES

*Matthew Griswold*¹ came from Kenilworth, England, to Windsor, Conn., and removed to Saybrook, Conn., about 1639; he was one of the first magistrates. He had charge of Governor Fenwick's affairs when the latter left the Colony. He had a grant of a large tract of land on which he settled, in Blackhall, a pleasant part of Old Lyme, Conn., which has now been the seat of the Griswold family for two and a half centuries (1881). To the church in Saybrook (of which Lyme was then a part) he presented a silver cup, still in existence, and which the church has sold to an individual, bearing this inscription: S. C. Don. Domini Matthew Griswold. The title simply indicates his social standing, as does the English title Mr. which is applied to him in the New London records. He died at the age of ninety-six, and his grave is unknown, — the more noticeable, as the monument still standing in Windsor over the grave of his father-in-law, Henry Wolcott, is ascribed to his agency. (The Wolcott Memorial, footnote, pp. 11, 12).

Matthew Griswold¹ m. Anna (also given Anne) Wolcott², da. of Henry¹; she came to America with her parents, Henry and Elizabeth (Saunders) Wolcott¹ of the parish of Lidiard St. Lawrence, near Tolland, Somersetshire, England, and Windsor, Conn. Their da. was Elizabeth Griswold² who m. (1) John Rogers, from whom she was divorced; (2) Peter Pratt, who d. Mar. 24, 1688; and (3), Matthew Beckwith II.

†At the Longmeadow Centennial Celebration in 1883, Rev. Dorus Clark of Boston spoke of his wife, a sister of Gad Olcott Bliss. He said, concerning Gad Olcott Bliss, "When I first knew him he was a stout boy, somewhat rough and brusque in his manners and very willing to have his own way. He became interested in a young lady in this village who was five years his senior. The Hon. Patrick Boies of Westfield, who knew the parties well, celebrated that event in heroic verse. One stanza ran on this wise:

*Bliss Olcott Gad, while yet a lad,
Love did possess him wholly;
And under age he did engage
To marry Harriet Cooley.*

That early marriage was a benison to him. Harriet Cooley saved him, and she made him, and though he stood at the head of his family and governed it, as by God's ordination every husband should do, yet after all she governed him, and very successfully too, because she did it so cautiously, kindly, deftly, Christianly, and because she had good enough sense never to tell him of it, and he never found it out."

Mrs. Charles Leon Cooley⁸ (No. 254), of East Longmeadow, Mass., supplied most of the data on the descendants of Clark Cooley⁵ (No. 220). One day during the summer of 1938 a Mr. Stetson, second husband of the widow of William Cooley⁷, No. 247 below, drove a horse and buggy by her home in Springfield, Mass., and she stopped him for information. He suggested her calling on his wife, the widow of William Cooley. Mrs. Charles L. Cooley drove with him to the house, on Allen St., the old Cooley homestead, and Mrs. Cooley-Stetson was urged to give the information wanted. "Well," she said, "some years ago there was an addition built on this house, and while the plaster was still moist Mrs. Hepsibah (Scott) Cooley wrote the names of all the members of her family. She used her finger, and wrote out the names and ages in large letters in the wet plaster." With a flashlight Mrs. C. L. Cooley and Mrs. Cooley-Stetson found the names, with ages, of the members of this family just beyond the door frame, on the walls of the clothes closet. The writing was dated February 12, 1849. Out of such curious sources comes information for genealogies, and of seeking them come adventures such as Mrs. C. L. Cooley found this one to be.

May 2, 1894, at the home of her parents in East Longmeadow, Clara Burton, da. Charles and Frances (Chadwick), b. Jan. 3, 1871, Prestwich, England.

The following is a January 16th, 1926, notice from a Springfield, Mass., newspaper:

SERVED TOWN AND DISTRICT IN PUBLIC OFFICE

C. Leon Cooley, Esteemed Former Official of East Longmeadow

East Longmeadow, Jan. 16. — This town was saddened this morning in the death of C. Leon Cooley, beloved town clerk and treasurer for the last six years. The town flag, flying at half-mast, mutely voices the feeling of all citizens.

Mr. Cooley was born Aug. 23, 1871, just over the East Longmeadow line in Springfield, the son of Billings and Jennie Colton Cooley. His entire life was spent here and he was closely identified with every best interest and development in the town...

Mr. Cooley was engaged until 12 years ago in the grocery business in town, as clerk and owner, and from 1915 until his resignation in October of last year he served the town of East Longmeadow in public offices, as selectman from 1915-1918, and as clerk and treasurer from 1919-1925. For two years the office of tax collector had been combined with the latter office, and Mr. Cooley's close relationship with all town affairs and problems had made him perhaps the best-known town representative.

In his associations which those offices made necessary, Mr. Cooley gave himself continually in service with a kindliness, unselfishness, and devotion, that made everyone his friend. When breaking health forced his resignation last October, it was realized how valuable his services had been and how his devotion to his duty had brought about the serious complication of diseases that forecast the end. Mr. Cooley will remain in the memory of the town as a Christian friend. He was possessed of a saving sense of humor and optimism that he never lost.

In 1918-1919 Mr. Cooley was Republican representative in the State Legislature for the 2nd Hampden district. He was a member of the Methodist Church of which his grandfather was a charter member, and was for many years treasurer of its board of trustees. He was a member of Charles C. Spellman lodge of Masons, Hampden lodge of Odd Fellows, and Ousamequin tribe of Red Men.

Another clipping, dated January 18, 1926, East Longmeadow, is headed:

EAST LONGMEADOW PAYS TRIBUTE TO CHARLES COOLEY

Probably the greatest tribute ever paid to a citizen of this town in recent years was accorded to Charles Leon Cooley, former representative, town clerk, treasurer and tax collector, at the funeral service conducted this afternoon in the Methodist church. Not only was the main auditorium filled to capacity, but a large number of citizens thronged the vicinity of the church unable to gain admittance.

For two hours this afternoon all business was suspended. The flag on the Town Hall was at half-mast. Completely filling the platform altar, windows, and choir gallery, was a profusion of flowers....

DANIEL COOLEY²

4 DANIEL COOLEY², s. Benjamin and Sarah Cooley, No. 1, page 195, b. May 2, 1651, Springfield, Mass.; d. there Feb. 9, 1727; m. (1) Dec. 8, 1680, Springfield, Elizabeth Wolcott, da. Simon and Martha (Pitkin), b. Aug. 19, 1662, d. Jan. 31, 1706/7, Springfield. (For her ancestry, see below.)

Daniel Cooley m. (2) June 17, 1709, Springfield, Lydia (Dumbleton) Burt, da. John and Mercy Dumbleton, widow (m. 1682) Jonathan Burt³, who was grandson of Henry Burt¹. She was b. Apr. 16, 1661, d. Jan. 31, 1739, Springfield.

Daniel Cooley² was the fourth child and third son of the immigrant Benjamin Cooley and his wife Sarah. He was born in Springfield, and spent his entire life in that vicinity, being one of those in Longmeadow to sign the petition of 1702/3 for permission to remove to higher ground following the flooding of the Longmeadow lowlands along the Connecticut River.

His occupation was that of a husbandman. He took an active part, if less outstanding than his father's, in the public affairs of Springfield, and was a man of considerable means for his time, dealing in several sales of property as listed in the pages to follow having to do with his deeds. His estate was valued at £825-5-11 when it was settled in 1729, the year following his death. He served as a selectman of Springfield in 1694/5.

The first reference to him in the public records of Springfield is in 1678, when he was 27 years old, and two years before his first marriage. He is known to have taken the Oath of Allegiance in that year.

In 1680, on December 8, Daniel Cooley married Elizabeth Wolcott. He was 29 years old, and Elizabeth was 18. She was of the third generation in this country, her grandfather, Henry Wolcott¹, having come to America in 1630. Her father was Simon Wolcott. Her mother was Martha Pitkin, sister of Mr. William Pitkin, the progenitor of the Pitkin family in America, and of Roger Pitkin of London. She was born in England in 1638.

MARTHA PITKIN

She followed her brother William to America in 1661, to return with him to England, 'not once supposing he intended to remain in the wilderness,' as she expressed it. Her first greeting on meeting her brother, whom she found feeding his swine, was, 'I left a brother in England serving his king, and find another in America serving his swine.'

Martha Pitkin was a lady endowed with more than ordinary talent, improved by an excellent education. The reception she met with in the colony was most flattering; her comely form and accomplished manner making the colonists anxious to retain her in their country. In the words of the Rev. Thomas Robbins, for many years the pastor of the church she attended, 'this girl put the colony in commotion. If possible she must be detained. The stock was too valuable to be parted with. It became a matter of general consultation what young man was good enough for Miss Pitkin.' Tradition says that so many young men wished to marry the accomplished beauty, that they cast lots for her hand, but fails to say what part Miss Pitkin was to take in the affair. The facts are, that the sons of Henry Wolcott, one of the first settlers of East Windsor, were well pleased with Miss Pitkin, and to avoid all question of strife or jealousy, it is believed it was decided by lot among themselves which one should sue for her hand. The lot fell to Simon Wolcott, the youngest son; at all events, he pressed his suit, and was successful. Her brother favored the match, and she became the wife of Simon Wolcott, and subsequently the mother of Governor Roger Wolcott, grandmother of Governor Oliver Wolcott, and great-grandmother of the second Governor Oliver Wolcott, and of Governor Roger Griswold. Governor Ellsworth was also a lineal descendant, and her granddaughter married Governor Matthew Griswold.

It was stated in the funeral sermon of Governor Roger Wolcott, her ninth child, that 'he never went to school, but was educated by his mother in her own dwelling'†.

THE WOLCOTT LINE

The English ancestry of the Wolcotts goes back to John Woolcott I of Tolland, Somersetshire, England, whose will was dated there Feb. 9, 1571, and proved Apr. 11, 1572. In his will are mentioned the children John, Alice and Mary, his wife Agnes, and brothers Henry and Roger Woolcot.

The will of John Wolcot II of Tolland, dated Nov. 10, 1623, mentions several children, among them his two eldest sons, Christopher Wolcott and Henry Woolcott. His wife's name was Joan.

*Henry Wolcott*¹, the surviving son of John and Joan Wolcott, was baptised at the parish Lidiard St. Lawrence, adjoining Tolland, Dec. 6, 1578. Several statements about when he came to America exist: one, that he came to Dorchester, Mass., in 1628; another, that he came on the ship "Mary and John" in the first company, Mar. 20, 1630, landing at Nantasket, Mass. At any rate he was one of the original settlers of Dorchester, and held many positions of trust. In 1636/7 he moved to Windsor, Conn., being one of five gentlemen who undertook the settlement of that town. He was elected to the house of magistrates of Connecticut in 1643, and served for the rest of his life. He died Mary 30, 1655, and left an enviable record as the progenitor of one of the most deservedly prominent families of this country.

Henry Wolcott m. in England, Jan. 19, 1606, Elizabeth Saunders, da. Thomas. She is buried with her husband in the rear of the First Congregational Church in Windsor. The gravestone erected to their memory by their son-in-law, Matthew Griswold of Windsor, who m. their daughter Anna Wolcott, is still standing.

The seven children of Henry and Elizabeth (Saunders) were all born in England. John apparently remained there, and died in England; Anna married Matthew Griswold of Windsor; Mary married Job Drake of Windsor; the other children were Henry, George, Christopher and Simon.

*Simon Wolcott*², the youngest son, was born Sept. 11, 1624/5, in England. His parents removed to America when he was about five years old; after getting settled in this country, they sent for the children. The exact date of their arrival is not known. Simon Wolcott was a freeman in 1654. After leaving Windsor, he lived in Simsbury, Conn., where in 1673 he was captain of a trainband, and in 1674 a selectman. He received a grant of 200 acres from the General Court in 1680, and was one of the few men in the Colony honored with the title of "Mister."

Simon Wolcott m. (1) Mar. 19, 1657, Joanna Cook, b. Aug. 5, 1638, d. Apr. 27, 1657, about six weeks after her marriage, when she was only eighteen years old; he was (2) the successful suitor for the hand of Martha Pitkin, after she arrived in Windsor in 1661, and on Oct. 17, 1661, they were married. After the death of Simon Wolcott, Martha m. Daniel Clark, Esq. She died Oct. 13, 1719, aged 80.

9 Children of Simon and Martha (Pitkin¹) Wolcott³:

- i ELIZABETH, Aug. 19, 1662; m. Daniel Cooley of Longmeadow.

(For additional information concerning the Wolcott family, see THE WOLCOTT MEMORIAL.)

264 DANIEL COOLEY II³

(*Daniel I*², *Benjamin*¹), s. Daniel and Elizabeth (Wolcott), No. 4, b. Mar. 23, 1683/4, Springfield (Longmeadow), Mass.; d. 1773, Springfield, or West Springfield.

About the middle of 1710 Daniel removed to Enfield, Conn., and before he went, on May 23, 1710, sold his brother Benjamin (No. 263) nine acres in Springfield (Longmeadow) [B-302, Hampshire (Hampden) Co. Reg. Deeds]. He was married the following November. In June of the next year Jemima his wife joined him in the exchange of land in Enfield. In May of 1710, Daniel paid £15 for "5 acres on both sides of the Scantic River."

From May 23, 1712, to Dec. 5, 1718, he sold real estate in Enfield. In the sale of May 28, 1716, the deed was signed by Daniel and Jemima. There were two sales in the closing months of 1718: at one time 14 acres, and about a week later, a 12-acre "homelot" property (History of Enfield).

According to the deeds in Hampshire (now Hampden) County (B-280), May 23, 1712, Daniel and Jemima signed a deed as residents of Enfield for the sale of a "Mansion house & Barn & fourteen acres of land" in Enfield, buying the same property the same day.

In November 1713, Daniel and Jemima sold for £65, 42 acres of land in Enfield. A month later they sold about 5 acres of meadow land on the Scantic River for £15. On Jan. 10, 1715/6, they sold 20 acres in two "parcels."

About a year later Daniel bought for £6, 10 acres in Enfield; and in November 1714, he paid £100 for a "messuage" and homelot land on the east side of the street, consisting of 12 acres.

While a resident of Enfield, Daniel was (1715) on a committee to enforce the law regarding swine, and again in 1717. He was elected constable (1717-1718). It has been said that in those days it was customary to elect men for the office of constable who were reliable and had good judgment.

On March 23, 1618, Daniel bought, for £25, 12 acres west of the Great River and south of the Agawam River, in Springfield. While he remained "of Enfield," he and Jemima sold property there amounting at least to £185.

On March 5, 1720/1, Daniel's was the first name entered in "A Record of y^e names of such persons as have been admitted to y^e Lords Table with the time when they were received" (Book of Records kept by the ministers of the Church in West Springfield).

In 1745, at the time of his second marriage, Daniel Cooley is given in Westfield Town Records as a resident of Granville, Mass. But on Sept. 7, 1746, his second wife was admitted to membership in the First Church of West Springfield, by letter from the church in Westfield, Mass.

Daniel Cooley II m. (1) Nov. 7, 1710, Enfield, Jemima Clark, da. John and Mary (Crow) of Windsor, Conn., b. Simsbury, Conn., d. Oct. 29, 1732, Springfield; m. (2) Aug. 8, 1745, Westfield, Rebecca Truman, prob. a widow. They were married by Rev. John Ballantine; no issue by the second marriage.

THE CLARK FAMILY

Hon. Daniel Clark, the immigrant ancestor, was b. England; d. Windsor, Conn., Aug. 12, 1710, in his 88th year. He came from Chester, England, in 1640, and is said to have been one of the Clark family of that place descended in direct line from King Edward I of England and Queen Eleanor, da. Ferdinand III, King of Castile. Well born and well educated, Daniel Clark took a useful and prominent part in the affairs of the Colony. He was Colonial Secretary, 1658-1664, and 1666. He was appointed to sit in "ye great pew," wainscoted for the sitting of magistrates. He was deputy to the General Court, 1657-1661, Assistant, 1662-1664; was appointed Captain of a troop of cavalry, May 12, 1664.

Aug. 29, 1688, Windsor, Conn. Daniel m., (2) Martha (Pitkin) Wolcott, widow of Simon Wolcott, and mother of Elizabeth Wolcott who married Daniel Cooley I². (See *Daniel Cooley*².)

The children of Daniel and Mary (Newberry) Clark were to marry into the first families of the town of Windsor, and were among the aristocracy there. Their granddaughter, Sarah Drake, was the wife of Governor Roger Wolcott of Connecticut. A great grandson, Hon. Roger Wolcott, was representative to the General Assembly, member of the Council and Judge of the Superior Court. A great granddaughter, Ursula, married Gov. Matthew Griswold of Lyme, Conn., and their son Roger was also Governor of Connecticut. A great grandson, Oliver Wolcott, graduated by Yale in 1747, was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, and in 1787 was elected Governor of Connecticut. (See the Clark, Wolcott, and Newberry Genealogies, and Stiles' History of Windsor, Conn.)

Mary Newberry, wife of Daniel Clark¹, was the daughter of Mr. Thomas Newberry, who came to Dorchester, Mass., in 1634, and was granted land Sept. 1634. He was one of ten Selectmen chosen Oct. 28, 1634, and "was one of the active leaders in the project of settling Windsor, Conn.," although he died suddenly, prob. 1635, before he had completed the removal to Windsor with his family.

Mr. Thomas Newberry was a descendant of Henry⁵ de Newburg (so called because born at the castle of Newbourg in Normandy), who was b. about 1045. Henry de Newburg⁵ received from William the Conqueror (his third cousin) "grants of great estates in Warwickshire, England, where he built the famous Warwick Castle, of which in 1078 he was appointed Constable by the Conqueror; in 1080 he was appointed Baron of the Exchequer of Normandy; about 1090 he was created Earl of Warwick by King William II, and dying June 20, 1123, he was buried beside his father in the Abbey of Preaux, Pouteaudemar, Normandy." Thomas Newberry the immigrant is given as the 21st generation of the family in The Newberry Genealogy, by J. Gardner Bartlett.

The children of Daniel Clark¹ and Mary (Newberry) were: CLARK: 1, Mary, Apr. 24, 1645; 2, Josiah, Jan. 21, 1647/8; 3, Elizabeth, Oct. 28, 1651; 4, Daniel, Apr. 4, 1654; 5, John, Apr. 10, 1656; 6, Mary, Sept. 22, 1658; 7, Samuel, July 6, 1661; 8, Sarah, Aug. 7, 1663; 9, Hannah, Aug. 29, 1665, d. y.; and 10, Nathaniel, Sept. 8, 1666, killed by Indians in 1690.

John Clark², s. Daniel and Mary (Newberry), was b. Apr. 10, 1656, d. Sept. 1715. He was admitted as an inhabitant of Simsbury, Dec. 24, 1686, and removed from Windsor to that place, although he later returned to Windsor. He m. 1685, Mary (Crow), daughter of Christopher and Mary (Burr). Mary (Crow) Clark m. (2) 1720, William Randall, of Enfield.

The name of Benjamin Burr of Hartford is inscribed on the monument erected by the Ancient Burying Ground Association in the yard of Central Congregational Church.

Christopher Crow was a Freeman in 1656, and was at Windsor in 1668, when he was allowed by the town to have Edward Bartlett "sojourn with him until he had taken off the crop he had sown." He had a farm at Greenfield in Windsor. In 1683 he was living in Hartford. After his death, his widow married Josiah Clark.

It is probable that the grandson of Daniel and Elizabeth, Thomas' only son Reuben, was brought up by his Cooley grandparents. William lived in Enfield, Conn., for a time, selling land there in 1733, 1734 and 1739. On May 3, 1742, he traded an Enfield farm for Bolton property owned by Joseph Olmsted. He held various town offices in Enfield, and was admitted to the Bolton Congregational Church, Feb. 24, 1759. (See History of Enfield, Conn., and Vital Records.)

The Greenwich records are difficult to secure from printed or original sources.

(Any member of the family descending from Benjamin Cooley⁴ will find enormously interesting The History of Pittsford, Vermont, by A. M. Caverly, and the story of Eunice (Cooley) Garfield-Pratt, daughter of Benjamin Cooley. She was stolen by the Indians and taken into captivity.)

The date of death of Benjamin Cooley and his second wife, Mary Needham, is unknown; they prob. both died in Greenwich.

da. Benjamin, No. 269 above, b. Sept. 2, 1732, Brimfield, Mass.; d. about 1825-30, place unknown. On Apr. 13, 1752, her intention to wed was filed in Leicester, Mass., and on May 4, 1752, she was married to Benjamin Garfield of Leicester. He may have been the son of Benjamin and Bethia (How) Garfield, b. May 6, 1718, Marlboro, Mass., d. June 27, 1755. Eunice m. (2), prob. in 1756, Ephraim Pratt, res. Hardwick (now Dana) and Wendell, Mass., d. Wendell, Jan. 20, 1809, bur. near Shutesbury and Lock's Village, Mass., prob. s. Phineas and Martha (Puffer), b. Jan. 10, 1732, Sudbury, Mass. Eunice (Cooley) Garfield was his second wife; the name of his first wife is not known.

Benjamin Garfield and Eunice (Cooley) lived near Northfield, Mass., and had one or more children, of whom nothing is known. One report cites a son, captured with his mother by the Indians, who visited his mother in later years, but preferred to live like a savage, as he had been brought up as an Indian; another report says she had only a daughter, Eunice Garfield, concerning whose fate Mrs. Garfield was uncertain. It seems likely that the story concerning the son is "historical fiction" rather than fact; such stories were common regarding anyone with children captured by the Indians. Married in 1752, captured in 1755, Eunice Cooley Garfield probably had a two-year-old child and an infant; the infant was probably slain by the Indians; generally, when a long march was intended, the mothers were not permitted to carry small infants with them.

In 1742 Orlando Bridgman had built a block-house on his farm, which stood within the then limits of Northfield, Mass. The fort was strongly built and well-picketed, and occupied by three families, those of Caleb How, Hilkiah Grout, and Benjamin Garfield.

On the morning of June 27, 1755, three years after the marriage of Benjamin Garfield and Eunice Cooley, these three men, with the two young sons of Caleb How, went to work in a meadow on the bank of the river a little above the fort. About sunset they started to return to the block-house. Mr. How and his sons were on horseback, and a little ahead of the others. Upon reaching the meadow hill north of the fort, they were fired upon from ambush. Caleb How was shot in the thigh and brought to the ground; he was then scalped by the Indians, and struck by a hatchet in the head and left for dead. His boys were taken alive. Grout and Garfield attempted to escape by crossing the river; Grout succeeded, but Benjamin Garfield was drowned.

As soon as it grew dark the Indians went to the fort, made the proper signal, which they had learned, and were admitted. They took the women and children prisoners, killing all infant children. The fort was then fired, and the captives started on their long trek to Canada.

There is nothing left of old Fort Bridgman. At the spot where the capture took place (now Vernon, Vt.) is a large boulder, commemorating the capture, taken from the old How farm, erected by the town of Vernon and marked with a tablet by the Brattleboro Chapter of D. A. R.; the monument seems to be largely to the memory of Caleb How, as no mention is made of the other two families involved.

The Indians took their captives to Canada. Eunice (Cooley) Garfield seems to have been a woman of considerable personal beauty, as well as of fortitude and presence of mind. She adapted herself to the situation by a forced cheerfulness and because of her evident courage gained favor with the Indians, and was thus treated fairly well on the long march. For many days she kept a sharp lookout for aid, expecting to be rescued by her husband, of whose death she learned only on her return. With the other two women she took turns standing all night, to be ready for quick flight, but no help came.

After many days and nights of travel, footsore and weary, the captives finally reached a French settlement in Canada. Here the Indians sold them as slaves. Eunice was sold to a French family, of which she quickly became a beloved and trusted member, and was soon entrusted with the purchase of all household goods and supplies. Longing for her freedom, she told her story to one of the tradesmen whose friendship she had gained. He was a kindly man and offered to put $10 with every dollar she could save, to be repaid after she got home, so that she could purchase her liberty; this she eventually did. She was sent to France, and from there to England and thence to Boston. She probably reached Massachusetts some time in 1756. In 1758, she was paid a sum of money by New Hampshire to cover her last year in Canada.

On her return to Massachusetts, Eunice learned of her husband's death. Shortly thereafter she became the second wife of Ephraim Pratt, and she lived for nearly half a century in Hardwick (now Dana), where she was widely known and beloved as "Aunt Pratt." People came from a long distance to see the old lady, and to hear the story of her Indian adventures. She lived to be well past 90. The place of her burial is unknown. Old graves in Dana were dug up in the process of building a reservoir for Boston; no record has been found of the old gravestones. Her second husband, Ephraim Pratt, is buried in the Pratt graveyard near Shutesbury and Lock's Village, with his son and grandson. At the time of her death Eunice may easily have been living with one of her numerable descendants, and have been buried in the lot of one of the other members of her family.

McINTYRE FAMILY

MAC-, a well known prefix of surnames of Celtic origin, signifying "son of," and therefore cognate with the Ap- of Welsh, the Fitz of Anglo-Norman, and the -son of English surnames. In England and other countries of Europe the great staple of family names is derived from a territorial source, but among the Celts of Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, the surname was almost uniformly that of the father or some ancestor, with a prefix. In Ireland, O (formerly ua), grandson or descendant, is the ordinary prefix, and the O's bear the proportion of ten to one to the Macs. In Scotland the case is reversed, and while there are said to be only three indigenous surnames in O, there are many hundreds of Macs. . . .

I am told that near kinsmen sometimes vary their common patronymic so much that none but themselves would imagine that they were of a common stock; thus a MacCrie might be uncle, and a MacCraw, cousin, to a MacRae. . . .

MacIntyre. Gael. Mac-an-taoir, "The son of the carpenter." This Gaelic name corresponds with the Irish Mactear.

MacTear. A contraction of MacAteer, or MacAnteer (in Irish, Mac an t'aoir), the son of a carpenter (Ulster Journal of Archaeology, No. 20).

Patronymica Britannica, by Mark Antony Lower, London, 1860, pages 204, 210, 212.

Mrs. Reba Cooley Gill¹⁰, da. Lyman E. Cooley⁹, (No. 483), writes, in 1939:

Of ancient origin, the CLAN MACINTYRE claims a close connection with the CLAN DONALD. It is believed and accepted generally that the name derived originally from Mac-an-t-aoir meaning "the son of the carpenter." As the name is found in widely separated districts, and carpenters, or wrights, are also found in many districts, this may be correct. Another derivation is that given by a prominent member of the Clan: a MacDonald called Cean-tire, from possessing lands in Kintyre, had a son John who acquired lands in Dhegnish in Lorn and was known as John Mac-Cein-teire-Dhegnish. The principal family was the Macintyres who, until they were forced to part with them in 1806, possessed the lands of Glenoe on Loch Etive. Members of this family emigrated to America.

The Clan was distinguished. It had a remarkable versatility. The Macintyres of Glenoe were hereditary foresters to the Stewarts, Lords of Lorn. The Macintyres of Badenoch are descended from the Bard Macintyre who was taken under the protection, in 1496, of William 13, of MacKintosh. The Macintyres of Rannoch were hereditary pipers to MacDonald of Clanranald; still another branch were famous for their weaving of hose and garters. There is a Clan Macintyre Society with headquarters at Glasgow. The Macintyre Crest is: A dexter hand holding a dagger in pale, proper. The badge: Heath. Warcry: Cruachan! Pipe Music: Gabhaidh sinn an Rathad Mor.

The MacDonald Clan from which the Clan Macintyre is supposed to have sprung was the most powerful of all the Clans and takes its name from Donald, grandson of Somerled, King of the Isles.

Mrs. Gill writes that she has consulted various English and Scottish histories, and Bain, city librarian, Glasgow, Scotland.

In May, 1729, Major William McIntier, as his name is spelled on his tombstone, with his wife Margaret and his daughter Frances, aged about 12, and his adopted son, his nephew William McIntire (b. 1711, Co. Donegal, Ireland), sailed from Ireland for America. Major William (b. 1673) and his brother, George McIntire, were born in the county of Donegal, Ireland, and moved from there to the County Cavan, where they resided for a time. Their parents are not known, but are believed to have gone to Ireland from Scotland.

Major William McIntire (as the name is usually spelled in the early records), with his wife, daughter and nephew William, the son of his brother George, settled in Springfield, Mass. He died Dec. 11, 1758, bur. in the old cemetery at Feeding Hills, to which locality he early removed. Feeding Hills is situated in the southwest section of Springfield; West Springfield became a parish in 1696, and a separate town in 1773. In 1757 the south end was set off as a separate parish, which was divided later into the parishes of Agawam and Feeding Hills.

It was in this section that William McIntire owned land, and was a man of local repute. His tombstone inscription reads: "Major under General Pepperell, at the Reduction of Cape Breton, A. D. 1744. In whose life the sincere Christian and Brave soldier Eminently appeared, who died December 11, 1758, in his 85th year."

Margaret, his widow, probably survived him, and probably lived with her daughter, Frances McIntire Cooley, in Granville, where the death of a Margaret McKintire is recorded in 1769, aged 90.

Frances, daughter of Major William and Margaret McIntire, is reported to have said, "I was born and bred a lady, and will not lead a peasant's life." This saying has been quoted by many of her descendants at one time or another. She must have been a woman of enduring charm, for her name was kept alive in legend by her descendants, and lived again in the name of one of her descendants, the famous Judge Thomas McIntyre Cooley⁷, No. 395.

Major William McIntyre, as the name is also spelled, lived in a house made of brick from his own meadowland, which he built on land conveyed to him and his nephew, William, in Feeding Hills, by Moses Ingersole (Reg. Deeds Hampden Co., Book I, pages 263-5), Apr. 24, 1736, which was "ye 9th year of ye Reighn of our Soverien Lord George ye Second, King of Great Britain, etc."

In 1736, no roads had been laid out, and the old Indian trails were followed to reach the McIntyre land. The low hills were covered with oak forests of huge trees; the annual burning by the Indians kept the brush down, and a carpet of sweet grass grew beneath the oaks. Hence the name, "Feeding Hills."

Thomas Dewey was Major William McIntyre's neighbor just over the hill to the west. The Indians lived in wigwam camps all around him. These must have been masterful men, bringing with them elements of the "New England conscience" and a strong sense of right and wrong, for they got along splendidly with the Indian neighbors and were regarded highly by them.

Major William McIntire apparently had no other children than Frances; the descendants of his family are through his adopted son, his nephew William McIntire.† This younger William married

†This material is presented because repeated searches through printed sources reveal nothing more on the McIntire family. The material here is based upon careful original research locally, and is believed to warrant preservation, though the descendants of William McIntire, nephew of Major William, are in no way related to the Cooley Family so far as is known.

His tombstone in the Feeding Hills Cemetery reads, "In memory of Mr. William McIntire who died Jan. 20, 1777, in the 69th year of his age. 'When God calls saints shall arise.' " His wife, "Mrs. Sarah," died June 28, 1787, aged 85, and is buried with her second husband.

THE SETTLEMENT OF PITTSFORD, VERMONT

(See History of Pittsford, Vt., 1872. A. M. Caverly, M. D., Tuttle & Co., Rutland, Vt., Printers)

Up to 1760, the territory which became Vermont was almost wholly an unbroken wilderness, with a few widely scattered stockades and clearings. During the French and Indian Wars, the region was frequently traversed by militiamen, and became known to the early settlers. The New England military expeditions to the lakes and Canada crossed these wilderness regions with the greatest difficulty. Army stores could only be transported on pack horses — no roads existed. The pack-horse trails became known as the "Indian Road" to Crown Point.

As early as 1756 a road was authorized by the Government of Massachusetts, and was started in 1759. This road passed through what later became the site of the town of Pittsford, Vermont, which took its name from being the best ford along Otter Creek, and, in honor of William Pitt, became "Pitt's Ford."

During the French and Indian Wars (1756-1763), the New England soldiers crossing the section became charmed with the valley of Otter Creek, and particularly pleased was GIDEON COOLEY⁵ (No. 279) of Greenwich, Mass. This section was claimed by New Hampshire. It had been promised to the soldiers as a reward for services in conquering the country from the claims of the French, but after the peace of 1760 many adventurers and speculators were given large grants of the section by the government of New Hampshire. The Pitt's Ford section was granted to one Ephraim Doolittle and 63 others, on Oct. 12, 1761, by a charter from New Hampshire. Little is known of the first grantees, none of whom ever had a permanent residence within the town.

Due to difficulties over territorial claims by New York and New Hampshire, the settlement of the town of Pittsford was delayed until 1769, when a right was sold to the first actual settler, Gideon Cooley, who bought of Ephraim Doolittle one right located in the south part of the township, on which he had previously made improvements. Gideon Cooley had enlisted in the beginning of the French War, and was assigned to the company commanded by Capt. Doolittle; during his three years' services, he frequently passed through the valley of the Otter Creek, and admired it greatly. He had even pointed out the spot on which he wanted to live. He finally chose, in 1766, some 70 acres on the east side of the Creek, towards the falls on the west, and the high lands on the east, and covered with shallow water which was held there by a beavers' dam. Gideon Cooley was promised by Capt. Doolittle one right of land as a gift, on the condition that he improve and actually occupy it, for the settlement of Pittsford was greatly wanted by the original grantees. To make his promise sure, he gave Gideon a bond for a deed.

Gideon hastened back to Greenwich to get his younger brother, BENJAMIN COOLEY (No. 280), to assist him in making needed improvements; Benjamin, however, was only 19, and his father refused to give him his time. It was agreed that Gideon remain in Greenwich and work for his father one year, in compensation for having a year of Benjamin's time. Early in 1767, at the expiration of this year, the two brothers, taking provisions, axes, shovel and hoe, set out, with one horse between them, to make themselves a future home in the wilderness. They made a clearing and began to build a log house, with no attention to the rules of architecture, it may be assumed, but of a shape and proportions which would be best adapted to their urgent necessities. (There is nothing left of this first house built in Pittsford except a small excavation in the ground about 15 rods northeast of the Loveland residence, on the east side of the present highway (1872). This excavation once constituted the cellar. The original Cooley homestead passed through many hands; its last known owners being the Loveland family.)

Gideon and Benjamin Cooley spent the winter of 1767 in Greenwich, but for the rest of that year lived in Pittsford, chiefly on game and fish. They brought with them seeds for the future harvest.

Benjamin had supposed he was to share equally with Gideon in the land and improvements, but learned that Gideon had secured both to himself. This caused some alienation of feelings, and Benjamin left his brother, went to the township of Addison, Vt., and took up land on the border of Lake Champlain. Gideon with a hired hand remained in Pittsford, planting vegetables, and preparing to receive his household the following year. Meantime Benjamin in Addison had suffered through the fall of 1768 from intermittent fever, and had been obliged to abandon his land there and return to Greenwich. In the winter of 1768, Gideon secured a pledge from Capt. Doolittle for a deed of a hundred acres for Benjamin, and in 1769 Gideon, his wife and five children, and Benjamin, set out about the first of May on the journey. Their scanty furniture and domestic utensils were packed in sacks which were carried on the backs of the horses, and progress was necessarily slow. After a toilsome and vexatious journey, the three grown-ups and five children reached the humble log cabin, far removed from all civilization, and the town of Pittsford, Vt., had begun.

During the winter of 1769/70 the family lived on vegetables raised the previous season, venison and fish. The tradition is that Gideon and Benjamin killed 17 bears during this first winter. The story of Gideon's difficult journey by snowshoes to get kettles for maple sugar is typical of the courage of these first settlers. Most of the cooking for the winter was done in a small iron kettle brought from Greenwich, and this utensil was preserved by members of the family as a relic of that olden time.

Benjamin's hundred acres included what later was known as the "Cooley Farm." In 1771 he built a log house on his land, and lived there until Feb. 18, 1773, when he married Ruth Beach, and soon built a frame house. (This was burned in 1802, and Benjamin built the house on the Cooley Farm, known later as the "Avery Place," which Dr. A. M. Caverly, the author of History of Pittsford, bought in 1863.)

The land-title controversy between the governments of New York and New Hampshire developed with considerable bitterness. The settlers who had New Hampshire grants and titles did not seriously object to being transferred to the jurisdiction of New York, which occurred, so long as the New York officials confined themselves to their legitimate duties. But when they went beyond this and attempted to take private property for no other reason than that the original title to it had come from the government of New Hampshire, these officials encountered a different treatment. One William Cockburn, for instance, wrote (in part) to New York, concerning Pittsford and Rutland settlers (1771):

...I have run out lots from the south bounds to within about two miles of the Great Falls. I found it in vain to persist any longer, as they were resolved at all events to stop us; there have been many threats pronounced against me. Gideon Cooley, who lives by the Great Falls, headed the party who was to shoot me..... and your acquaintance Nathaniel Allen was in the woods with another party, blacked and dressed like Indians...

The general outcome of the dispute between those holding grants from New York and from New Hampshire was the development of two factions, "The Green Mountain Boys" who had New Hampshire grants, and the "Yorkers" who had grants from New York. Both Benjamin and Gideon Cooley were prominent among these original GREEN MOUNTAIN BOYS. Benjamin was an officer of the "mob," as it was called by the Yorkers. This "mob," under its name of "The Green Mountain Boys," soon made that name an honorable one associated with some of the most brilliant military achievements in the history of the country.

The battles over the grants were postponed on the outbreak of the Revolutionary War, Apr. 19, 1775, at Lexington. It had been known for a long time by the leaders that, in case of war, they must possess the important fortresses of Ticonderoga and Crown Point. Connecticut men passed through Bennington, Vermont, and Ethan Allen, who had, in 1772, been reported to have "brought up from Connecticut 12 or 15 of the most blackguard fellows he could get, double armed," joined up. He sent Major Beach as a messenger to collect men to meet his party at a place since known as Hand's Point, in the town of Shoreham; Beach went on foot to Rutland, Pittsford, Neshobe (now Brandon), Middlebury, Whiting and Shoreham, making a sixty-mile circuit in 24 hours.

In passing through Pittsford, Beach called at the residence of Capt. Benjamin Cooley, to whom he delivered the message of Col. Allen. Capt. Cooley at once left his field, seized his gun, gathered together a few men, and proceeded to the appointed place of rendezvous. Allen and his men took the old Crown Point road in Sudbury, led through the wilderness by a pilot who imitated the notes of the cuckoo, and came to Lake Champlain where the men lay concealed from the view of the enemy in a ravine. Here they were joined by the recruits, among whom were Captain Benjamin Cooley and his Pittsford boys.

Being unwilling to serve under New York, the New Hampshire grantees thus organized themselves into a separate corps, keeping their name of "Green Mountain Boys," and were organized under General Schuyler, who had for a time headquartered at Ticonderoga. The story of their exploits is one of the most thrilling and better known phases of the Revolutionary War. (A good account of the part played by residents of Pittsford is given in Dr. Caverly's history of the town, from which this material in its entirety is taken. The compiler feels that this book is one of the finest single volumes anyone interested in Cooley family records could own. It is vividly written, and because members of the Cooley family were prominent in the early days, much attention is given to this family.)

When REUBEN COOLEY⁵ (No. 281), another son of Benjamin of Greenwich, came to Pittsford is not known; he does not appear in the town records, but apparently lived there, at least for a time.

CALEB COOLEY⁵ (No. 283), the youngest of the four brothers who lived in Pittsford, was at home with his father in Greenwich when his brother, Capt. Benjamin Cooley, returned to Greenwich, in 1778. He urged this youngest brother to return to Pittsford with him. Their father, Benjamin Cooley Sr., as a special inducement offered to give young Caleb one hundred acres of the wild lands in Pittsford. Although Caleb spent considerable time in Pittsford, he did not make it his home until 1780, when he became a member of his brother Capt. Benjamin's family. He served under his brother from that time until the close of the Revolutionary War, when he devoted himself to improvements on his land. (This Caleb Cooley homestead was owned, in 1871, by H. F. Lothrop.) In 1784, Caleb began the construction of a plank house on the small clearing he had made, and on May 6, 1784, he married Miss Elizabeth Sanford, and they immediately occupied the unfinished house.

Miss Sanford, the bride, was a lady of rare excellence; she had passed through scenes of suffering and affliction which seldom fall to the lot of women even in the settlement of new countries. She was born Apr. 26, 1762, and was a daughter of Thomas Sanford, one of the early settlers of Weybridge in 1775, and among those who shared the disasters attending the settlement of that township.

“One Sabbath morning in the month of November, while Elizabeth Sanford was milking a cow near her father’s house, she was suddenly startled by the hideous noise of a party of Indians and Tories who were rushing directly towards her. She rose, and, at the sight of her fiendish assailants, was so amazed that she stood motionless for a few moments and then, fainting, fell upon the ground. The Indians took the pail and drank the milk. They then went into the house, made her father and younger brothers prisoners, and having split the cradle into small pieces they piled them up in the middle of the room and set the pile on fire. They then told the women they might leave the premises, if they would not inform their neighbors. The destroyers carried the feather beds out of the house, and having ripped open the ticks, scattered the feathers in every direction. Mrs. Sanford had what was very uncommon at that early day — two silk dresses. The Indians seized them, tore them into shreds, which they tied upon the ends of long poles, and raising these in the air, they ran with them about the premises, exulting to see the fragments of silk fluttering in the breeze. One fierce-looking Indian took Mrs. Sanford’s infant child and was about to dash its head against a stone, but the earnest pleadings of its mother touched his heart, and he restored it unharmed to her arms. The other families in the township shared a similar fate. The Indians killed all the cattle in the neighborhood or drove them to the British army, made all the men prisoners and took them to Quebec, and left the women and children to take care of themselves.

“These lingered in the vicinity a few days, not knowing which way to turn; but as their stock of provisions had been destroyed or carried off by the enemy, they were soon reduced to great distress. . . . One afternoon while on the bank of the Creek, they descried . . . two canoes descending the stream . . . As they drew near their fears were dissipated as they received a friendly greeting.”

In the canoes was a scouting party from Pittsford fort. All the refugees were taken into the canoes save three, one of them Elizabeth Sanford. Those in the boats reached Pittsford the following night; before morning, one of the women was delivered of a child. The three others, with two soldiers, set out on foot, and arrived a day later.

Elizabeth Sanford wanted to do something to help out her family, and thus went to work. Eventually she worked in the family of Capt. Benjamin Cooley of Pittsford, on the express condition that her compensation should be in provisions for her family. Her father eventually returned from Quebec. Elizabeth remained at Capt. Cooley's until she was married to his young brother, Caleb Cooley.

Ebenezer Cooley was in Capt. John Kirkland's Co., Col. Dickinson's Hampshire Co. Regt., at the battle of Bennington, Vt., in August, 1777, and in Capt. Abraham Salisbury's Vermont Co. in October of that year.

He was a Baptist minister, but about 1780, having met Mother Ann Lee, he joined the new Shaker faith and was called to be first elder of a "family" at New Lebanon, N. Y. children with him, but his wife fetched them home again, though they preferred staying with the Shakers, and "one of them called down fire from heaven to burn their Mother up—but she kept the children."

289 CAPT. (DEACON) WILLIAM COOLEY⁵

(*Daniel III*⁴, *II*³, *I*², *Benjamin*¹), s. Daniel Cooley III and Frances (McIntyre), No. 273, b. Mar. 17, 1736, Simsbury, Conn.; d. Apr. 14, 1825, Granville, Mass., where he is buried.

The following sketch of his life was written by his son, Rev. Timothy Mather Cooley⁶, No. 326, prob. about 1830.

William Cooley possessed a robust and vigorous constitution, an enterprising spirit, and a mind of uncommon stability and perseverance. Gentle in his manner, frank and independent in his character, and for habits of industry and economy in the management of his affairs during his protracted life, no man was more remarkable.

At the age of 14 he was indented to a Mr. King of Westfield to learn the shoemaker's trade. Having with all fidelity finished his seven years' service, he entered upon the world with only his freedom suit. He soon earned fifteen pounds, which he invested in a beautiful young horse. But a wise Providence made better calculations for him than he did for himself. In less than one month, his horse sickened and died, and he discerned an overruling hand in this rebuke, and learned a lesson of practical wisdom which he carried with him through life.

Nov. 27, 1759, he was married to Miss Sarah Mather, of Windsor, Conn., the sixth in descent from Rev. Richard Mather of Dorchester. He built a shop near the house now occupied by Manson Warner (date not known, about 1830), for the shoemaking business, and in process of time he erected shops for a tannery and prosecuted both branches in business in addition to the oversight of an extensive farm. His business was good, and every turn of his hand seemed to be attended with prosperity and wealth flowed in from every quarter. He was a favorite among his townsmen, and held the offices of Assessor, Selectman, and Representative, and other places of trust, and though of limited education, discharged the various duties to the acceptance of his constituents.

In April, 1776, he was chosen Captain of the Militia Company which was then regarded as one of the first offices in the gift of the town. This was in 'times that tried men's souls,' being the commencement of the war with Great Britain. Commission:

COLONY OF MASSACHUSETTS BAY

The Major Part of the Council of the Massachusetts Bay in New England

To William Cooley,
Gentleman:

GREETING: You being appointed Captain of the fifth company of the Third Regiment of the Militia of the county of Hampshire whereof John Moseley, Esq., is Colonel. By virtue of the Power vested in us, we do by these Presents reposing special trust in your loyalty, courage, and good conduct, commission you accordingly. You are therefore carefully and diligently to discharge the duty of a Captain in leading, ordering, and exercising said company in arms, both inferior officers and soldiers. And to help them in good order and discipline. And they are hereby commanded to obey you as their Captain. And you are yourself to obey and follow such orders and instructions as you shall from time to time receive from the Major part of the Council or your superior Officers.

Given unto our hands and the seal of the Colony at Watertown the 26th day of April A. D. 1776.

By command of the Major Part of the Council, Perez Morton, Secy.

Capt. William Cooley went into two campaigns, one at Ticonderoga, the other at White Plains. In consequence of a wound he was obliged to retire and take lodgings in a mansion near the camp. It proved to be the residence of a Tory and their hospitality was extended to an American officer with reluctance. It soon happened that a soldier from the army, having purchased some nuts of one of the children, ran off without paying for them. The boy ran in with his complaint of the soldier, and Capt. Cooley instantly dispatched his waiter for the soldier, and the full pay was promptly recovered. Nothing could exceed the kindness that was shown the wounded officer afterwards.

When at the age of about 42, in one of the severest of New England winters, the woods were impassable and the drifts so high the road was apportioned in sections to each man, Capt. Cooley's section lying south was the worst and most drifted part of the road. By intense exertion to finish it in the shortest time and best manner, he took cold which terminated in a permanent, chronic asthma which made him an invalid for life. His cough daily for nearly an hour in the morning was so distressing, that it seemed as though his breath would stop, and his life become extinct. He was ever afterward unable to labor or to walk far, although he continued to have the superintendence of his farm and tannery, and was almost constantly in the summer season on horseback, directing his workmen, and ordering the affairs of his farm.

In the autumn of 1785, in a severe time of coughing, he burst a blood vessel and a profuse hemorrhage seemed to threaten immediate death. His family and friends were called to his bed to see him die, but an Almighty hand was interposed and help came when hope was gone. He recovered in a short time and was enabled to pursue his avocations as usual.

Though in feeble health, his spirits were unbroken, and his courage unabated. He prosecuted his tannery and he pursued the business of his farm with vigor and success. He built four dwelling houses, three of which were equal to any in the town. Though he commenced without funds or patrons, and was an invalid nearly half a century, he accumulated an amount of property equal to any of his townsmen. Industry, temperance, and economy marked his whole course of life. According to the custom of the day, he furnished his laborers in harvest season with a square bottle of rum, always of the best quality. His family were trained in habits of the strictest industry. His daughters to the spinning wheel, and the kitchen; his sons to the hoe and the sickle. Anything like a holiday except on Election and Thanksgiving days and a military review was unknown among his children or apprentices.

On the 2nd day of December, 1822, the beloved wife of his youth who had ministered to him in all his infirmities and shared with him in his toils and joys and cares, departed this life at the age of eighty-four years. Her end was as quiet as her whole life had been peaceful and pious and happy. At midnight, without a groan or a struggle to awaken her beloved husband, her spirit took its flight. The first notice was towards morning that he found his dear companion dead and cold. Upon calling for a light, he found by the position of the corpse that her death must have been like the falling to sleep of an infant. It was on the night of the monthly concert. A happy circumstance, to ascend into heaven with the prayers of the church for the conversion of the world.

But what we most of all admire is his personal religion. In the strictest sense he was an honest man, and one fact shows that it was the honesty of principle. He was in the habit of loaning money, and in some cases took more than legal interest. At length from the honest convictions of his own mind, he felt that this was wrong, and refunded all the money which he had thus taken. His religion was far beyond mere moral honesty. It was the religion not of form, but of substance. It was a healthy, robust principle which goes forth to do and suffer the will of heaven. It was the religion of faith and love, the religion of the old Puritans.

During his whole lifetime in all the multiplicity of his concerns, he was a strict observer of the Sabbath. No labor nor recreation were ever allowed in or about his dwelling or fields. Let what would come, the Lord's day must be kept inviolate. From 12 o'clock Saturday night to 12 on the Sabbath night was his holy time. Anything like jesting or light reading, or making or receiving visits, was unknown in his family. The Bible and books from a well selected library furnished reading for the Sabbath. He was constant in his attendance at church, although more than two miles distant. The last eight years of his life he was lame and blind, and yet he was rarely ever absent. Family prayers accompanied reading the Scriptures, in course, in the morning, and were offered twice a day, and no meal was suffered to be partaken without his accustomed invocation and giving of thanks. An omission can scarcely be recollected for years.

Family scenes cannot be recollected but with intense interest. Perfect obedience and dutiful respect marked the course of the children. His discipline was exact and even rigid. On a week day was the still, gentle hum of business, early and late. On the Sabbath attendance on public and family worship, reading the Scriptures and other religious books, together with instruction in the catechism, imparted variety and tranquillity to the hours of the holy time. The old Family Bible, the godly example and faithful instruction of parents, and affectionate and uniform harmony among brothers and sisters, presented a scene of rural felicity both interesting and delightful.

Although there were few objects of public charity in his day, yet his views of economy never led him into the narrow paths of parsimony. He was kind and liberal to those who were in want. Never was the beggar sent away unalmsed from his door. A family of the Aborigines by the name of Peethouse burrowed in a cabin upon the borders of his grounds, and cut their broom sticks and basket timber from his forests, and was fed from his table for many years.

He was a friend to revivals of religion, and took an active part in promoting them. The last years of his life, being deprived of his sight, he retired from all active business. His was a truly happy and tranquil old age. His parlor was the resort of the pious, both young and old. He was giving the finish to a consistent Christian character. Though at times he had doubts and fears respecting his personal religion, yet few who knew him could doubt his Christian piety. His last sickness was short and it was but few Sabbaths that he was detained from the house of God. His deathbed was not triumphant, but peaceful. On the 14th of April, 1825, he departed this life in his ninetieth year. He was Deacon in the church twenty-seven years.

†This date is from Stiles History of Ancient Windsor; her date of birth, in a D.A.R. lineage, is given Nov. 22, 1735; in an article by Rev. Timothy Mather Cooley it is given as Nov. 26, 1736; in The Cemetery Book of Granville, Nov. 26, 1738.

Dorchester, July 5, 1650, d. Mar. 18, 1727/8; grad. Harvard College 1671. *Samuel Mather*⁶ was a physician; *Timothy Mather*⁷ was b. Apr. 23, 1710, d. Apr. 6, 1772, Windsor, where he lived; his daughter was *Sarah Mather*⁸ who m. Capt. William Cooley. (The Mather family data can be found in Vol. II, of Stiles' History of Ancient Windsor, pages 482-492, incl.; the lineage of Sarah Mather⁸ is given in the Encyclopedia of Biography for Mass., pub. by the American Historical Society, pages 130-132. There is also a published Mather Genealogy of the descendants of Rev. Richard Mather.)

The station and character and loving kindness of a mother is unsurpassed by that of any other kindred or relationship. In the distribution of mankind into families one of the most happy devices of infinite wisdom for the general well being of the great family in this world of sin, sorrow, toil, and disappointments. The writer of this notice has no reason to complain that he has not been blest with his full share of friends and well wishers. But of all these I must give the preference to my much loved mother. . . .

She had a good common education for the day, in reading and writing. . . .

My earliest recollections of her are, that she possessed personal beauty, this might, however, be ascribed to association of ideas.

Windsor was at this time a pleasant village, Granville was nearly a desart (sic), when she entered her new home. This must be the best place to prepare for heaven.

She was blest as the means of saving the life of her son who is the author of this Memoir. In Sept. and Oct. 1777 the camp distemper prevailed here with mortal effect. Nearly twenty per cent of the entire population of East Granville died in two months. Two of her children were buried in one week. At the burial of the second, the father noticed a place for another grave, which he supposed would be (needed) soon. Physicians had given me over and ceased to prescribe. My careful mother did not cease to ad (sic) such means as she thought at least harmless, if not essentially salularly (sic). This week passed away, and my frame became a skeleton, mere skin and bones. After many days one of the physicians called and said to my mother, "Why! your son will get well, what have you been doing for him?" My recovery was very gradual, and even years elapsed before I had the full strength of my casuals.

As a christian mother she gave her children a religious education. I remember she took me to closet with her, when a child, for secret prayer.

290 JOHN COOLEY I⁵

(*Daniel III*⁴, *II*³, *I*², *Benjamin*¹), s. Daniel III and Frances (McIntyre), No. 273, b. Feb. 16, 1737/8, Springfield, Mass., d. Nov. 29, 1828, Canandaigua, Ontario Co., N. Y., prob. bur. Sutherland Cemetery, in the John Cooley II lot, where there is a small stone marked "J. C."

John Cooley was raised in Granville, Mass., and lived there until he moved to Ontario Co., to be near his first grandson, Lyman Cooley⁷. During the Revolutionary War John served as a corporal in the company of his brother, Capt. William Cooley, in Col. John Mosley's Hampshire Co. Regt., and in other companies of the same regiment, from 1776 to 1777.

He was a drover, and once, after a successful sale of cattle, probably in the West, was returning to Granville, his saddle bags full of paper money. He was, it may be assumed, contemplating his affluence with considerable pleasure and had not learned of the near-collapse of American money. He stayed overnight in Albany, N. Y.; when he went to pay his bill the next morning, his money was worthless. It would not even buy a meal of victuals.† We may feel certain John Cooley became one of those men who brought into usage the still familiar phrase, "not worth a Continental."

John Cooley, Sr., outlived his son, John, Jr., by 12 years. Under the 1815 bond, John, Jr.'s, wife, Lucina (Bissell), was responsible for the support of John, Sr.,

† "...the currency sank so low as to be refused in exchange for the necessities of life."—Travels in New England and New York, Dwight, Vol. IV, page 369. "On the 31st of May, 1781, by Act of Congress, Continental bills ceased to circulate as money, and provision was made for refunding the same ..."—Short History of Paper Money, Gouge, Vol. II, pages 25-26. In 1781, John Cooley I was 42/3 years old; John II was 12 years old.

and his wife. But John, Sr., never wavered in his great affection for his first grandson, Lyman Cooley, and spent much of his time at Lyman's home. On one of his journeys between the two houses he lost his wallet containing the story of his family, and all his business documents.

Once Lucina (Bissell) Cooley was told that her father-in-law, John Cooley, Sr., had "six men" working for him. She was a noted horsewoman, so she got on her horse and rode over to see about it. When she got there, she found an Indian named "Six Men" working for John. (This story also has come down regarding a "Mr. Eleven Thompson," as well as the Indian, Six Men.)

John Cooley, Sr., was a large, finely built man. His son, John, Jr., was a man of medium size. Ernest L. Cooley⁹ (No. 486), a descendant, once reported that he had discovered (no means of his discovery was given) that John Cooley, Sr., used to say, "Sometimes I think I drink too much; then again, I think I drink too little, so I average about right." Ernest Cooley added, "I infer from this that our ancestor was at times a sad dog, and then a merry wag—at least he had a sense of humor."

All in all, John Cooley, Sr., seems to have been a robust, colorful figure, affectionate, a good business man, and a person of activity throughout his life of ninety years.

He married twice; his first wife was Ann Hosford⁵, b. June 25, 1747, Canaan, Conn., d. 1774, Granville, Mass., ae. 27, in childbed. Her ancestry is given below. He m. (2) Phebe Pratt, a widow; she had, by her first marriage, two children, Aaron and Nancy Pratt. (No data appear on this family in The Pratt Family by Rev. F. W. Chapman.) Nancy Pratt, b. 1774, d. Aug. 3, 1836, m. about 1794 Rev. James Coe⁷, b. May 19, 1769, Granville, settled in Ohio and d.

Aug. 7, 1845, Randolph, Portage Co. He was the son of James⁶ and Rachel (Bentum) Coe (Deacon Joseph⁵, Capt. Joseph⁴, Capt. John³, Robert², Robert Coe, Puritan.)

Nothing is known of Phebe (Pratt) Cooley; it is believed she died in Rochester, N. Y.

He was in Cornwall, Conn. in 1742, Norwich in 1748; he was living in Cannan in 1744, when Esther Smithrem of Albany, widow, under date of Aug. 27, 1744, left one half of her estate to her daughter, "Anne, wife of Timothy Hosford of Canaan." At a place called Livingston, Crawford Co., Pa., he passed the last cabin, and trusting to his pocket compass he bore southwesterly, and entered the state of Ohio." In 1805, he removed from Canandaigua, N. Y., with Elisha Giddings; they took their families on sleds drawn by oxen, and reached Hartford, Ohio, in March. 293 THOMAS COOLEY I⁵

(*Daniel III*⁴, *II*³, *I*², *Benjamin*¹), s. Daniel III and Frances (McIntyre), No. 273, b. July 12, 1747, Springfield (rec. also Westfield), Mass., d. Apr. 12, 1826, Attica, N. Y., bur. in Attica Center Cemetery. Thomas m. Mary Strickland, da. Joseph and Mary of Granville, Mass., where she was born July 10, 1753. She d. May 12, 1819, ae. 67, bur. with her husband. Her father, Joseph Strickland, was a Revolutionary Soldier, b. May 10, 1721, Simsbury, Conn., d. Nov. 29, 1802, ae. 80, Granville. His wife's maiden name is not known; she was Mary —, d. Apr. 10, 1795, ae. 64, Granville.

Thomas Cooley was a Supervisor in Attica in 1813, 1814 and 1815. He was a farmer, and one of the early settlers in the vicinity, although it has not been determined just when he moved to the "Genesee Country." He res. Granville 1783. There is some evidence that he lived for a time in Ontario Co., N. Y., before moving to Attica. He apparently followed his son, George Cooley⁶ (No. 337), to Attica; George moved there in 1808 from Oneida Co., N. Y.

Thomas and Mary (Strickland) Cooley lived in a log cabin on a hill near what is now called the North Road into Attica Center. Grove Cooley⁶ (No. 336), lived on an adjoining farm to the north of the original homestead. Thomas Cooley II⁶ (No. 335) lived directly west of his father; his farm lay between the North Road and the "new" highway. Eli Cooley was a man of great energy and industry. He was instrumental in building both the church and the schoolhouse at Deerfield. The day after it was decided by those interested that a church should be built, Eli Cooley was up and out on the mountain getting out his share of the timber. He provided that his son Samuel should live with his son Benjamin, Caleb to live with David, until they were 21, and the younger sons were to be taught "the art or trade of a weaver." TREASURED HEIRLOOM GIVES TELLING RECORD

One of the treasured heirlooms displayed at the Planters' Club colonial exhibit several weeks ago at the High Museum of Art was an old sampler worked in silk cross-stitch by Chloe Cooley in her thirteenth year. It depicts the record of her family, ancestors of Mesdames James D. Cromer, Bernard Wolff, and Alfred Newell, prominent members of Atlanta's social contingent. (See Family 365.) The skillful fingers of this maiden of yesteryear wrought a telling record with bits of silk of the love, joy, and sorrow, of the family of Eli Cooley and Chloe Allen Cooley, who were married in the spring of 1788, and were parents of the accomplished young needlewoman.

With conventional designs of green leaves and pink flowers, somewhat faded but still beautiful, the sampler measuring a half a yard wide by three quarters of a yard in length, is a perfect record of a bygone age. Tiny stitches introduce tones of brown and black into the lettering, and at the bottom of the sampler worked on a field of blue is inscribed the words, "Wrought by Chloe Cooley, Aged 13 Years."

The wording of the sampler consists of the name, age, and date of birth, of each of Eli and Chloe's children.

Ebenezer Cooley III lived in New Orleans, and was a Surgeon in the U. S. Navy. He resigned six months before the Battle of New Orleans (1815).

The following, which is taken from the History of Norwich, Conn., not dated, but apparently occurring about 1800, may refer to him: "Capt. Sanger, in the schooner Chloe, was captured; he and his people were stripped of every article of value, even to clothing on their persons. The Captain himself was set ashore at Lagaira, barefoot. The vessel was afterwards released, but at a later period was again captured, and its Master, Ebenezer Cooley, carried into Guadaloupe, and never appeared in our waters afterwards."

EXTRACTS FROM AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF REV. TIMOTHY MATHER COOLEY

(Some quotations from this autobiography are given in connection with his children's data. The autobiography was written in 1849.)

I was born March 13th, 1772, in Granville, Hampden Co. State of Massachusetts. My father William Cooley was an officer in the War of the Revolution, and for many years deacon of the first church of Christ in Granville, of which I have been pastor for more than half a century. My mother was Sarah Mather of Windsor, Connecticut. Both of my parents were professors of religion, and of exemplary piety through a long life. They gave instructions to their children in the Assembly's Catechism, on the evening after the Sabbath, which they observed with great strictness as holy time...

I myself experienced a severe attack of .. the camp fever (which prevailed in 1777)... In two respects this distressing visitation of sickness has been converted into a blessing. For 8 years my constitution was slender and frail, which led me to form habits of great simplicity in diet, by persevering in which, my health has been a sky without a cloud. My dining instead of meats and condiments has been a simple pint of milk with fruit and bread and with this simple fair my health through life has been such that I have been confined to my room no day since my recovery from camp fever at the age of five years.

†The material on Rev. Timothy Mather Cooley appearing in this genealogy was taken from Granville Church, Cemetery, and Vital Records, the Granville Jubilees, and the family Bible of James Parsons Cooley; these records were copied personally by M. E. Cooley in 1885, when he spent considerable time in Granville going through old records. His material has been supplemented by private records in the possession of a descendant of Rev. Timothy Mather Cooley, Mrs. Merle D. Graves⁹ of Pittsfield, Mass. (Family No. 381).

Another happy, Providential result — I was very solicitous for an education. At the age of twelve or thirteen, I procured a Latin Grammar and commenced without any teaching, to learn the language. My mother encouraged me in my object, while my father was decided in his preference that I should stay on the farm. Having continued in rather frail health, till my fifteenth year, my father despairing of seeing me an ablebodied farmer, yielded to my great solicitude for a liberal education.

In June 1786, my father, to my great surprise and joy, disclosed his intentions to give me an education, and having procured a place in the family of Rev. Noah Atwater of Westfield, I took my Bible and Grammar, and went on foot to the place of my new home.

A better place could not have been selected. I loved my teacher much. He was a scholar, a philosopher and a christian — a man of great gravity — “an Israelite indeed in whom was no guile.” I owe more to him than to any among the living or dead, for my habits of thinking and acting, and for whatever talents for usefulness, I may have acquired. He seldom conversed with me on the subject of personal religion, but his example was a sermon, daily. In my long residence in his family I never witnessed one word or one act which was not in my view perfectly consistent with the purity of the christian religion.

My first lessons were in English Grammar, of which I had acquired some knowledge without the aid of a teacher. Before the first week closed, I commenced the Latin Accidents. From my earliest remembrance, I felt a peculiar respect for ministers, and I thought I should be extremely happy if I could enter the ministry, though I had no sense of the sacred office, or of the requisite spiritual qualifications.

God was pleased to visit my soul, at so early a date, that my first recollections seem to have been mingled with impressions which were produced by the Spirit of grace. In childhood and youth, through the influence of restraining grace, I was preserved from gross immoralities, and even from those lesser offenses to which human nature is incident. I abstained carefully from Sabbath breaking, profaneness, falsehood, and from those nightly assemblies and pastimes which some regard as innocent. I refrained wholly from mingling with my casuals in what were then called frolicks. I had many alarming apprehensions of the judgement of the Great Day, feeling utterly unprepared for a reckoning with God. One night in particular, when so young as to sleep in my mothers bedroom in the trundle bed, having heard of a sudden death, my mind was greatly distressed with a sense of sin and danger, so that sleep departed from my eyelids, and I employed most of the night in cries and prayers. About this time I prepared a place in the woods, to which I used to resort for secret prayer. Doddridge's Rise and Progress, and the preaching of my beloved instructor were not without effect in continuing and deepening these early religious impressions. My resolutions however were inconstant, and my feelings weakening.

At length however, I began to cherish trembling hope that I had passed from death into life. . . . Early in 1788, being fifteen years old, I professed religion by uniting with the First Church of Christ in Granville. The next September, at the age of 16, I entered Yale College. For a season, I had so many doubts and dark hours, that I abstained from communing with college church. At length, for the sake of consistency rather than from increased evidence that I was a christian, I transferred my relation to the church in Yale College. In my college life I maintained the form but I fear, without the "power of godliness." Prayer was maintained in my room, a part of the time. I took part in the Saturday evening conference meeting, which was sustained through the term of my college life. Religion was low in college and in New England, and especially in my own soul.

I commenced my ministry with little reading sense of the affecting responsibilities of my Ordination Vows. I never reflect upon that event without blushing and self reproach. The first two and a half years of my ministry, though I satisfied my church and Parish, I was far from satisfying myself. Grace at heart, I always regarded as an essential requisite for the ministry.

At times I half resolved to call together the church and make them a frank disclosure that they were living under an unsanctified ministry. Such feelings were usually succeeded by a comfortless hope that perhaps I was a christian. There was so much correctness in my sentiments and deportment externally, that as far as I know, I enjoyed the charitable favor of both christians and christian ministers. My sentiments for substance were conformable to the standards in the New England churches. My sermons preached at that time, which I often examine, though exempt from essential error, are without point and profitless. The first sermon which I prepared and preached, which was worthy of a sermon, was carried home to the hearers, and great and precious revival of religion followed immediately. As many as 70 expressed hopes of a saving change, and with very few exceptions, they have been ornaments to their christian profession. . . . The following record was made two years after the event.

On the week preceding the first Sabbath in July 1798, "As I was in my study writing a sermon from these words, Mighty to save, and was attempting to describe in a feeling manner the excellency of Christ, my mind though somewhat animated with the subject was composed, and while I was writing, with my pen in my hand, on this subject, suddenly a view of Christ burst in upon my mind with unspeakable glory. I beheld him as one altogether lovely. He appeared to my mind with a beauty which I never saw before. My whole soul was swallowed up with this object of love. At the same time my heart was pierced with grief for my sins against so lovely a being. O! I could look on him whom I had pierced with my sins and mourn and be in bitterness. His lovely beauty appeared as plain as the sun at noonday. All might see it if they would open their eyes. I wondered. I had never seen this beauty before. He appeared just a Savior, as poor, helpless sinners need.

"The next sabbath was sacramental day. Alas! never did I attend such a sacrament before! !"

It is more than half a century since I was favored with those views and feelings. I often exclaim, "Lord why am I a guest!" My past life has been vile and unprofitable. I have passed through scenes and changes of distress and doubt of hope and comfort. There is great peace in contemplating the character of God — . . . Those doctrines which exalt God and abase the creature — those which show that salvation is all of grace, are peculiarly precious to me.

In 1788 I was admitted into Yale College. Two days before the close of the first term having opportunity to ride home without expense, I left college without permission. Two others in the upper classes were my companions in transgression. On my return, the subject was treated with great sincerity by the Faculty of College. After attempting, without effect, to influence me to ascribe my transgression to the influence of those that were my superiors in age and college standing, the result was suspension from college. This caused me bitter sorrow. A petition for my restoration could not be heard though signed by the best scholars in college. I was studious in college, but others deservedly held a higher rank than myself.

After being graduated in 1792, I employed two years in teaching; one in New Haven, availing myself of Dean Berkley's Bounty, and the other in Litchfield, Conn.

In the latter place, I was apprised by the committee, Gen. Tracy and Major Seymour, that the only difficulty in the school was in the case of one very bad boy, who would require to be dreadfully punished every day, that he had been always so treated, and there was no other way. On commencing the school, I noticed the bad boy the first day, and would distinguish him by his keen blue eye, and rapid movements. I determined to treat him with marked favoritism. The effect was happy. He was won and permanently reclaimed. He has occupied a seat on the Bench as a judge of high standing.

In 1794 I was invited by President Fitch to the office of Instructor in Williams College, but, in consequence of other engagements, declined it.

The instruction of youth has engaged my attention to some extent through life. Academies being few and remote, this duty seemed to lie upon pastors of churches. As many as 800 have received instruction from my lips. As many as 60 have thus been aided in preparation for the ministry. Others have held seats in congress, on the bench, in the Senate, and in other high places of business and of influence.

As many as 20 or more have been sent to me, under censure, from colleges. Some have returned, and lived and died unreclaimed. Others have become men of great excellence. Two have been missionaries in heathen lands. In some marked cases, their exile to this place has been blessed as the means of their effectual conversion to God. It is wholly the Lord's work, and blessed be his name.

In (1802) I was elected a member of the Board of Westfield Academy.

In 1812 I was elected a Trustee, and in 1846, a Vice President, of Williams College.

In 1796 I was elected school committeeman of the town of Granville, and for nearly half a century have been elected to the same office. In these stations and employments which have been assigned to me in the Providence of God, it has been my chief concern to promote among the youth of our country, a sanctified literature.

FAMILY SCENES

In the Providence of God, I was directed to the choice of Miss Content Chapman as my companion for life. She was the only daughter of Mr. Isaac and Mrs. Ruth Chapman of Granville. Her father fell a victim to the camp fever, in the army of the Revolution in October 1776, in the campaign at Ticonderoga. She was left thus an orphan at the age of 6 months. Her father was a young man of an excellent spirit — a true patriot and an humble, devoted christian. Through a merciful Providence, the inestimable loss of her father was in some measure repaired by a second marriage of her lovely and excellent mother to Col. Jacob Bates, an officer in the war of the Revolution. In him she found a kind, and generous, and highminded father, and if he betrayed any favoritism towards the children, it was but too evident that the step daughter was the favorite. This might have been ascribed to the frailty of her temperament, or the sprightliness of her mind and amiability of her disposition. This marriage has been to myself a most propitious connection. Though she has been the subject of many and long protracted sufferings and sickness, yet by her great intelligence and discriminating discernment of characters and events, she has extended much influence in her station, and ensured a discreet supervision over all the varied concerns of domestic life. Our Heavenly Father has generously sent to us ten children — five sons and five daughters.

MINISTRY IN GRANVILLE

The first twenty-five years of my ministry, the expenses of my numerous family, and of frequent visitations of sickness, were not defrayed without strenuous effort. My kind-hearted parishoners often made large contributions, beyond my stipulated salary. With great unanimity they raised my permanent salary to $500 annually. My own earnings, in the laborious business of teaching, have amounted to about $10,000.

In 1818 my very kind parishoners, to furnish facilities for my removal to the center, contributed a generous sum for the erection of suitable buildings, and appointed a committee to superintend the work, thus freeing me from the perplexing care of a supervision of the business of building my house. Near the close of 1819, my house, pleasantly located in the center of my Parish, was finished, and painted within and without. (This house, in 1939, is owned and occupied by John MacAllister Stevenson, Jr.⁹ — Hattie Maria Cooley⁸ — Samuel Mather Cooley⁷ — Rev. Timothy Mather Cooley⁶. See Family 381.) It was opened for the reception of myself and family. This has furnished me much comfort, for the past thirty years, which, without the persevering and high minded generosity of the Parish, I could never have realized.

A neighboring town, by unanimous vote, made a liberal appropriation from their Treasury, for ministerial services, occasionally and gratuitously rendered amidst domestic scenes both distressing and expensive. The Lord's hand has supplied my wants, and his grace has been sufficient for me.

About the year 1820, I received a communication from the church in Granville, Ohio, inquiring whether a call from that church would meet my acceptance? A letter from a highly respectable correspondent stated that a salary of $1000 annually would be offered. I declined the proposal.

STUDY FOR THEOLOGICAL AND PASTORAL LIFE

In October 1794 I commenced the study of Theology with the Rev. Dr. Backus of Somers. He was a Calvinist in sentiment, and in fellowship with the views of Hopkins, for substance. He possessed a singular talent to chain the attention of his audience, and also to win his students to his own views of truth, without seeming to do it. In his personal appearance, especially in the pulpit, there was a striking resemblance between him and Rev. Dr. Wales, Professor of Divinity in Yale College, under whose ministry I passed my college life. His method of instructions in Theology was to give out a system of questions, 25 in number, on which his students were required to write and present their essays for friendly criticism. I purposed professional studies, in part, with two other divines of distinction. On the week preceeding the first Sabbath in June 1795, I offered myself to New Haven East Association, at their session in Durham, at the house of Dr. Goodrich, and was examined and received my licensure as candidate for the ministry. The Association kindly offered to recommend me to the town of Bradford in New Haven Co. which was vacant, but being under previous engagement I declined.

The first Sabbath I preached in Granville, my native place, and the next week, agreeable to an engagement, commenced preaching as a candidate in Salisbury, Conn. At the end of four months, I commenced supplying the pulpit in the place of my birth. These two places had been long destitute of the settled ministry and were now in a state of apathy and great declension...

The parish had been a moral waste for twenty years. Horse racing, card playing, disgusting intemperance, or as it was styled, "tavernhaunting," fighting even to bloodshedding, and other practises still more revolting, if possible, marked the character of the place... Ignorance as well as vice was affectingly prevalent. And to complete the moral picture, there had been division in the church, and council after council had been called in to advise and heal difficulties, but apparently without effect. The parish was small and the Baptist church was half as large as the Congregational church, and the common sentiment was, that in no case was the civil law to be called in or a tax to be levied, to sustain the ministry. But there was a work to be accomplished here, and if it was committed to earthern vessels, it was that the excellency of the power might be of God and not of us . . .

My ordination in the ministry was on the 3rd of February, 1796, in the same house where 22 years before, I had been presented to the Lord by my Godly parents, in Christian baptism and the ordaining council conversed and transacted the preparatory business at the house where, 23 years before I had received my birth . . .

The good Providence of God disposed my church and congregation to treat me with great kindness and to overlook failures and imperfections which, on review, I cannot forgive in myself. The novelty of the occasion, in having a settled pastor, and especially one of their own sons, filled the house on the Sabbath. To put to rest forever the vexing subject of a tax to support the ministry, a permanent fund was raised, with surprising unanimity, and equality, the interest of which would fully pay my annual salary . . .

June 5, 1803, I entered upon a Missionary tour, by appointment of Hampshire Co. Missionary Society for 18 weeks. The field was large, extending from the Susquehannah River to Lake Ontario. I rode over 1300 miles, preached 122 sermons, baptised 51 persons, formed one church of 23 members, made over 300 family visits. On commencing this mission, it was my impression that to be instrumental of saving one sinner from death would be a most precious reward for my self denial and labor. Through the grace of God in one such instance, the subject came some hundreds of miles and made profession in my own church and presented her children to Baptism.

May 1, 1805 a church was formed in my meeting-house for the purpose of a settling in a new township in the center of Ohio. I preached a sermon on the occasion which was printed. Probably no church in the United States has been more spiritual, active and efficient than the church in Granville, Ohio.

In May 1812 my Bible Class was formed and enrolled. A small, select library was procured for their benefit at a season when books were scarce and at a high price. Each member of the class was furnished with a Bible, with this inscription: Read the scriptures daily. (This was the first Bible Class formed in New England, probably in the world)

At the unanimous request of the church and Parish, under my pastoral care, the 27th of Aug. 1845 was observed as a Jubilee, a half century having elapsed since my first sermon in this place. The occasion collected a larger assembly than was ever seen in this place, comprising many who had long since emigrated from us, and a general gathering from other towns.†

In the autumn of 1834, by consent of the parish, I made a pastoral visit to the church in Granville, Ohio. They had often solicited a visit. They had been separated from us nearly 30 years. In the history of this beloved daughter, truth is more captivating than fiction. The emigrants had converted a dark and dense forest into beautiful fields, gardens and orchards. They had within the town 100 brick buildings. They had one incorporated college and two most successful Academies. They showed me the place where they felled the first tree. Their first Sabbath was solemnly and sacredly observed, by religious worship both forenoon and afternoon . . .

In reviewing the years of my long ministry, while I see many, very many failures and sins to lament, I still feel conscious of having presented the gospel in its truth and purity, keeping back nothing which was profitable. Though I call no man father, in respect to my belief, yet I have from earliest youth read and loved the writings of Edwards. Probably my preaching, in manner, resembles that of that eminent man of God more than any other writer.

†At this Jubilee there were Cooleys from eight states, as follows: Samuel M. from New Orleans, Timothy C. from Metamora, T. A. (?), Isaac A., Belleville, N. J., William B. from Pittsfield, Mass., Edwin A. from Attica, N. Y., Watson from Ill., Francis H., place unknown, Frederick L. from Jacksonville, Ill., Horace, place unknown, George from Attica, Juliette from Attica, Luman from Philadelphia, Germanicus from Columbus, Ohio, Cotton M. from Windsor, Conn., Grove from Attica, Otis H. from Springfield, Mass., Hosea from Granville, Ohio, John B. from Burlington, Vt., William H. from Burlington, George from Milwaukee, Wis., Rowland P. from Benson, Vt., Mila S. from Benson, Thomas from Attica, Charles from Canandaigua, N. Y., Daniel from Attica, and Philemon from Lockport, N. Y.

Wife of Rev. Timothy Mather Cooley

From a portrait painted about 1796; reprinted from the Granville Jubilee, 1845

I have just completed 77 years. In a retrospect of the past, I am convinced that the term of my life has scarcely had its parallel for interest in all past time. In the advancement of civil liberty by the American Revolution, in the reign of terror and bloodshed in connection with the wars of the French Republic, in the circulation of the scriptures and the successful efforts to evangelise the world, in improvements in mechanic arts especially in the employment of steam and electricity, improvements in agriculture and in education, in powerful and frequent revivals of religion, in the extension of our own country to the Pacific ocean — in the revolution in France, Italy, Prussia, and Germany, of recent date — all present the last three fourths of a century as the most eventful period of time since time began.

I am now in the eventide of life, and God is imparting to me health, quietude and comfort. My hopes of a blessed immortality are brightening and the character of God, the work of the Redeemer, the gospel plan of Salvation, and the future glory of the church, are themes of delightful contemplation day and night.

†Jessie wrote of her grandmother, Eliza Content Cooley⁷, in a letter dated Apr. 28, 1898: "I write to inform you that my grandmother died about 2 weeks ago, having lived 96 years and 2 months. She retained all her faculties until the last, walked out every pleasant day, and last January I dined with her at her home and she sat with us until 10:30 P. M., enjoying an evening family gathering numbering four generations, the youngest being my daughter of 18 years." The letter is unidentified as to place and full name of sender, and of recipient.

In disposition he was equally public-spirited but less grave than his brother, and filled a place that will long be remembered in Granville; the two brothers worked together in every good cause. Mr. John Cooley, Jun^r
Canandaigua Ontario County

John Cooley II⁶ was born and raised in Granville. When the Barlows moved to Canandaigua John Cooley followed them shortly thereafter, and married Margaret Barlow, presumably in Canandaigua, Dec. 26, 1790. They lived for their few years of married life in a house on the north side of West Gibson Street, facing Main Street. This house, which became known as the "Judge Taylor Place," must have been one of the first houses built in Canandaigua. The main part of the house now stands farther down West Gibson St. (formerly Barlow St.), near the railroad (1939).

Canandaigua was the chief settlement and the main center of the Phelps and Gorham Purchase, known also as the Genesee Tract; this purchase was completed in 1788, and that fall a survey of the land was made. A good part of the tract was sold Aug. 10, 1790, to Robert Morris, who in turn resold it to the Holland Land Co. But Canandaigua, or Township No. 10 of the 3rd Range, was withheld. No one wintered at Canandaigua in 1788/9, but early in the spring of 1789 the first settler arrived, and by 1790 there were 18 heads of families in the town, one of whom was Abner Barlow. Before 1790 ended, there was a considerable accession to the population. By 1795 the Duke of Liancourt wrote in his rambles that he went from Bath to Canandaigua, and stayed at "Capt. Metcalf's," who had bought his land for 1 s. per acre and sold a part of it for $3 per acre. Of the town of Canandaigua, he said, "The houses, although built of wood, are much better than any of that description I have hitherto seen. They consist mostly of joiner's work, and are prettily painted.

In front of some of them are small courts, surrounded with neat railings. There are two Inns in the town, and several shops where commodities are sold, and shoes and other articles made" (quoted in Pioneer History of Phelps and Gorham's Purchase, by O. Turner, Rochester, N. Y., 1851, page 175).

Following the death of his wife, Margaret (Barlow), John Cooley, Jr., took his small son Lyman back to Granville, in 1793. In Jan. 1795 he married again, and in Aug. and Oct. of 1796 he bought the 65-acre farm which became known as the John Cooley Homestead.† It was on this farm, which he cleared of timber and on which he erected buildings, that the children of his second marriage were born. After his second marriage, John Cooley, Jr., returned to Granville for his son Lyman. His father, John Cooley, Sr., then removed, with his family, from Granville to Canandaigua, to be near his grandson, and the two Johns lived on the John Cooley Homestead.† In 1800 John Cooley, Sr., bought a one-third interest in this place, and in 1815 John Cooley, Jr., was bound to John Cooley, Sr., "to furnish John Cooley Sr. and his wife Phebe with all necessary support during the term of their natural lives." Since John, Sr., outlived his son, this bond was kept by Lucina (Bissell) Cooley, John, Jr.'s, second wife.

†Aug. 1, 1796, John Cooley purchased of Rufus Case for £100 the north half of Lot 72, 50 or more acres; Oct. 26, 1796, John Cooley bought at auction, with other land, the north part of Lot 54. Fifteen acres of the northwest corner of Lot 54, and the 50 acres across the road, being the north half of Lot 72, Twp. 10, Range 3, formed the 65-acre John Cooley Homestead. This place was known in later years as the Hickox place, being purchased by J. H. Hickox, who was residing on it in 1876. The deed of 1800 for one-third interest in the place, from John, Jr., to John, Sr., and the bond of 1815, are in the "Lyman Cooley Deerskin Roll" in the possession (1939) of M. E. Cooley⁹.

John Cooley, Jr., died at the age of 48, when his youngest son, John B., was only three years old.

The following letter was written to his widow, Lucina (Bissell) Cooley, by Lydia Nourse, daughter of Nathaniel. Upon his death, Nathaniel Nourse willed a 200-acre farm to Lucina (Bissell) Cooley; this farm became the John B. Cooley Homestead.

Dear Mrs. Cooley:

Salem, June 21, 1819

The request that was made me when at your house to return a few lines was too kind to be forgotten or neglected, and I send you this not because I have anything to say but merely to let you know that I got home as conveniently, and met with as little difficulty as I did on my way out. In four days and a half after I left the Village of Canandaigua, I arrived safe at my father's house, without the least accident or any adventure of any kind whatever. (A distance of less than 400 miles.) The journey was rather pleasant, particularly from Albany to Boston, as that part of the way the stage company happened to be all well bred agreeable people, remarkably cheerful and communicative, some of them was fond of singing and had fine voices. Good company is said to shorten distances, and one of the ladys declared at the end of our route that she had never known so long a road to appear so short in all her life.

I found our family much as I left them excepting my father whose health we hope is a little improved. When I related to him what I had heard and seen, and what I received, he was not so much disappointed as I feared, nor did he appear so much vexed with Mr. Sheldon as I expected. His ill health has given a greater degree of indifference than is useful or is natural. But Mr. S's conduct is far from being satisfactory to him, as one hundred dollars and thirty eight cents with a promise that he would come to Salem in September was all that was obtained from him. His promises I do not place much confidence in, but what his intentions are time must determine. I hope you will excuse my mentioning this subject as we have spoke of it so often and except my acknowledgment for the friendly interest you have always expressed for my welfare.

My mother wishes to be remembered, and sends her sincere thanks for the kind welcome, and obliging attentions her child received in your family, they will ever be recollected with sentiments of esteem. We should be glad to hear from you every week, and I hope that Margaret, and Ann, will neither of them neglect me, tell them not to be particular when writing to me, but say anything that happens to come first, their letters will always be agreeable, and received with pleasure, by one who wishes ever to be considered as a friend, not a nominal one, but really,

Yours Affectionately,
L. (Lydia) Nourse

Lucina (Bissell) Cooley, widow of John II⁶, must have been a woman of considerable determination and ability. During her life in Canandaigua, she made three separate trips on horseback alone, to visit relatives in Massachusetts and Connecticut. When her husband died, her only son was three years old. She managed the property until he was twelve, when he took over running a farm himself.

353 REV. ELI FIELD COOLEY⁶

(*Rinnah*⁵, *Simon II*⁴, *I*³, *Daniel*², *Benjamin*¹), s. Rinnah and Lucy (Field), No. 301, b. Oct. 15, 1781, Sunderland, Mass.; d. Apr. 22, 1860, Trenton, N. J.

Eli Field Cooley attended the Academy at Hartford, Conn., and studied theology under Rev. Dr. Samuel Stanhope Smith, president of the College of New Jersey; grad. 1806, and licensed by the Presbytery of New Brunswick, N. J., Oct. 3, 1809. He received a call to the First Presbyterian Church of Cherry Valley, Otsego Co., N. Y., and was there ordained and installed by the Oneida Presbytery. He spent ten years in Cherry Valley, then his health required that he leave, and he went to the church of Middletown Point, now Matawan, N. J., where he was installed June 2, 1820. He spent three years there, then was called to the First Church of Trenton, now Ewing, N. J., where he was installed April 10, 1823, and served until July 19, 1857. He managed a farm to supplement his salary as pastor.

He was active in all movements to promote the general welfare of the communities in which he served; was one of the originators of the New Jersey Historical Society, and an early supporter of American colonization. With Rev. Oliver Andrew of Springfield, Mass., and James Fennimore Cooper, of Cooperstown, N. Y., the writer, he was a delegate from the Otsego Co. Bible Society to the meeting at New York City May 11, 1816, which founded the American Bible Society. Through his instrumentality the legislature was induced to make the first appropriation ever made for the support of the blind and the deaf and dumb. He was an early advocate of the temperance movement; served on a committee of trustees to superintend the construction of buildings for the College of New Jersey; and on committee of the New Jersey legislature for the erection of an asylum for the insane. At the time of his death he was engaged in preliminary arrangements regarding the new Theological Seminary at Princeton, N. J., of which he was also a trustee.

Rev. Eli Field Cooley was an excellent speaker, and was noted for an even-tempered consistency. He was never extreme in his opinions; was conservative without being narrow, was moderate but firm. He held decided views but was not obtrusive, and possessed a degree of humility not often seen. The closing years of his life, spent on his farm, were singularly pleasant and peaceful. He was dearly beloved by all who knew him.

At the re-opening of the First Presbyterian Church of Trenton, later the Presbyterian Church of Ewing, after the building had been remodeled, Dr. Cooley preached a sermon, December 1, 1839, on the text, "Your Fathers: where are they? and the Prophets: do they live forever?" (Zechariah: 1:5). In the preparation of this discourse he had gathered a large amount of genealogical information concerning the families in his congregation, some of which was published in various papers. His information, he said, was collected from the examination of deeds and wills, from surveys, and from Family Bibles, and from daily conversation with aged persons of his acquaintance. During the latter part of his life it was his intention to publish the result of his labors, but this pleasure was denied him. His researches were added to by his son, William Scudder Cooley⁷, No. 419, and were finally published by his granddaughter, Hannah L. Cooley⁸ (Family 420), under the title of Genealogy of Early Settlers of Trenton and Ewing, N. J. (This little volume, long out of print, and extremely valuable, represents the only publication of Cooley genealogical material ever undertaken by any member of the family, according to the best knowledge of the compiler. The material on Rev. Eli Field Cooley and his family is taken from this book.)

Rev. Eli Field Cooley was married three times: (1) Oct. 15, 1807, to Hannah Scudder; they were m. by Rev. Samuel Stanhope Smith. Hannah Scudder d. Apr. 6, 1817, ae. 29, in Cherry Valley. The ladies of the Presbyterian Church there erected a monument "To the memory of one whom it were unpardonable to lay down in silence, and of whom it were difficult to speak with justice; for her true character will look like flattery, and the least abatement of it is an injury to her memory." Rev. Eli Field Cooley m. (2) Catherine Henderson, da. Col. Thomas, M. D., of Freehold, N. J.; she d. 1854, Springfield, Ill. He m. (3) Amy Reading, da. Pierson.

Jan. 11, 1839, East Hartford, Conn. Dr. William Cooley studied medicine under his father, was for many years a prominent physician and surgeon and a leading citizen in what is now known as Manchester, Conn. Of an eccentric nature, his speeches as representative from Manchester were long remembered in the Connecticut Legislature. He was witty and sarcastic, and an excellent speaker. His sense of humor, his benevolence and originality, endeared him to all circles. He was a firm believer in the democratic principles of government, and deeply religious. His death was widely felt.

SAMUEL COOLEY,

Probably 8th generation "A young man" in 1844

(Note: Believing the following extract, quoted from Triumph Over Pain, by Rene Fulop-Miller (Paul Translation), Copyright 1938, pages 105/6, is of considerable interest, it is included here. (Used by special permission of the Publishers, the Bobbs-Merrill Company.) It probably refers to an unknown member of the family of descendants of Dr. Samuel Cooley⁵ (b. 1755), No. 308.)

A Hartford, Conn. paper, one morning in December, 1844, carried the following notice, read by a young dentist named Horace Wells.

'A grand experimentation of the effects produced by inhaling nitrous oxide, exhilarating or laughing gas! will be given at Union Hall this (Tuesday) evening, December 10, 1844... Twelve young men have volunteered to inhale the gas to commence the entertainment....'

On the evening of December 10, Wells and his wife went to Union Hall, where "all the best people" were assembled, to enjoy the "gentle affair." Gardner Colton [was] the itinerant lecturer... The first of the spectators to mount the platform in order to try the gas was a young man named Samuel A. Cooley, a clerk at the largest drugstore in Hartford. Hardly had Colton handed him the gas-filled silk packing, and the inhalation started, when Cooley began to behave like a lunatic. Jumping to his feet, he danced about the stage. Then he caught sight of a fancied enemy, and began to thrash the air with his arms.

In the second row of the front of the hall was a little fellow, an assistant at the rival drugstore. Seeing Cooley's absurd behaviour, he burst out laughing. Now Cooley had found a real enemy. He jumped down from the platform, and evading the attempts of the "eight strong men" to interfere, flung himself upon the derider. The other pharmaceutical assistant fled in terror, while Cooley chased him from row to row. The alarm and excitement of the audience grew intense as everyone made way. Cooley stumbled over a bench, but was on his feet again in a moment, and kept up the pursuit. He had almost reached the quarry when he suddenly stopped dead, for the effects of the gas had passed off. As if awakening from a dream, Cooley looked around in bewilderment, while a flurry of applause followed; and, smiling somewhat ruefully, the involuntary hero of the evening sat down upon the nearest vacant chair.

Note:—This is the first authentic record of the effect of gas as an anesthetic in the United States, according to Fulop-Miller.

NOTE

EBENEZER COOLEY III⁶ removed to New Orleans, and res. there. No records concerning him have been located except Norwich, Conn., vital records of births of some of his children. The following letter and clipping are self-explanatory. Nothing more is known of this family, but Judge WILLIAM H. COOLEY below mentioned may well be a descendant.

371 THOMAS COOLEY⁷

(*William H. Cooley*⁹, *Judge William H.*⁸, *Judge Thomas J.*⁷, *Ebenezer III*⁶, *II*⁵, *I*⁴, *Benjamin*³, *Daniel*², *Benjamin*¹). See Family No. 318.

A letter from Charles Horton Cooley of Ann Arbor to Mortimer E. Cooley of Ann Arbor, written from Washington, D. C., July 15, 1889, reads as follows:

There was a young fellow by the name of Cooley in here the other day and I pumped him for a little information about his family, thinking it might interest you.

His name is William H. Cooley, address care Shattuck & Hoffman, New Orleans. His mother, a creole lady and a widow, is at present living here in Washington. His father was Judge Wm. H. Cooley of New Orleans, his grandfather Judge Thomas J. Cooley, who came to New Orleans about 1832, and was the son of Ebenezer Cooley of Massachusetts. His father, Judge William H. Cooley, was a prominent man in New Orleans, and was not very long since (1873) killed in a duel with shotguns at forty yards by Rett, then editor of the New Orleans Picayune. This duel was practically a murder, as Rett was a noted duellist and got up the quarrel with the deliberate purpose of killing Judge Cooley. The family was Union in sentiment and remained neutral during the war.

William H. Cooley, Jr., is a pleasant young fellow, and I am not sure but a close observer might detect a family resemblance, though he says he takes after his mother.

An interesting coincidence in connection with the foregoing letter, written in 1889, is the following, taken from a clipping appearing in The Times Picayune, New Orleans, La., Sunday, May 29, 1938.

CORNERSTONE'S CONTENTS RECALLS DUELDAYS HERE

Escanaba, Mich., in 1873, was as far removed from New Orleans, rhetorically speaking, as the present-day court-method of settling disputes from the gun duel in affaires d'honneur of a former era, yet a newspaper editor in that small town dipped pen in ink on July 13, 1873, to "berate" New Orleans for allowing dueling... The edition of the paper... was preserved to posterity in the cornerstone of St. Joseph's Catholic Church of Escanaba... The Tribune was recently brought from a metal box in which rested... old newspapers of the day, old coins and church documents, when the church was demolished to make way for a new structure.

A May 12 issue of the Escanaba Daily Press... reproduced the Tribune's article on dueling. . . The Daily Press quoted the Tribune article as berating "the city of New Orleans for allowing dueling, referring to a recent duel between R. B. Rhett, Jr., of The New Orleans Picayune, and ex-Judge William H. Cooley in which Cooley was killed on the second shot.

"...The difficulty sprung out of an article in The Picayune headed Hawkins vs. The Picayune; a reply to it by Judge Cooley provoked the challenge by Colonel Rhett. The weapons used were double-barreled shot-guns, loaded with ball — distance 40 feet. Rhett's first shot ranged high, Cooley's to the right; At the second, both firing together, Cooley fell, the ball passing into his side and through his heart.

"Let the world blush for New Orleans that two such eminent citizens should be so lost to reason and so blinded by passion as to seek satisfaction in the barbarous practices of dueling."

The article erred slightly, according to an account of the duel in The New Orleans Times of July 2, 1873. The distance was 40 yards, the Times news-story said.

The duel, according to the Times, was precipitated by a Picayune article entitled Hawkins vs. The Picayune, in which Editor Rhett, commenting on a libel suit for $100,000 filed by Judge Jacob Hawkins, referred to "malicious and wilfully false" representations made by Judge Cooley in the case. Cooley replied to the article, wherefore Editor Rhett answered with a challenge.

The duel was fought at Montgomery Station, two hours' ride on the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas railroad at that time, and "only the seconds and a few warm personal friends of each of the principals were aware of the object of the mission," the Times related.

"The train reached Montgomery Station at 10 o'clock. At 25 minutes past 10 the last shot was fired. Four and a half minutes later, Judge Cooley was a corpse," the Times said.

m. Sept. 3, 1848, Londonderry, Windham Co., Vt., Clara Aldrich, da. Niles and Mary (Estey), b. Sept. 13, 1829.

Mrs. Cooley was active as a leader in literary, church and philanthropic societies; organizer and originator of clubs, including the Monday Afternoon Club, which she founded about 1893, and over which she presided. She was also founder of the Dubuque Woman's Club, estab. 1876. In recognition of her work as a pioneer club woman of the Middle West, she was elected an honorary member of Sorosis (New York City), and the Gen. Federation of Women's Clubs elected her an honorary vice-pres. of the Federation. She was an Honorary State Regent of Iowa D. A. R., member of the Am. Economic Assn., Am. Acad. of Political and Social Science, Nat. Geographical Society, life member of the Mary Washington Assn., was one of the first officers of the Assn. for the Advancement of Women, of which the late Julia Ward Howe was president (Woman's Who's Who of Am., 1914-15).

Judge Dennis Nelson Cooley became Clerk of the House of Representatives in Vermont; in 1854 went West, settling at Dubuque, Iowa, where he practiced law. In 1864 he was appointed Commissioner to South Carolina; in that same year he was appointed, by President Lincoln, as Commissioner of Indian Affairs. In 1873 he was appointed Commissioner to the Vienna Exposition. For 21 years he was President of the 1st National Bank of Dubuque; was one of the first presidents of the Iowa State Bankers' Association. (Additional data regarding his life can be found in Vol. II of The Cleveland Genealogy.)

While he was Commissioner of Indian Affairs, delegations from the Choctaw and Chickasaw nations of Indians called on Judge Dennis Nelson Cooley. Having finished their business, and being about to depart for their homes west of Arkansas, they waited on that gentleman at his private residence, and presented him with a beautiful gold-headed cane, with a suitable inscription, as a testimonial of their respect and friendship, and an evidence of their appreciation of his courtesy to them. The address made at this time by Col. Peter P. Pritchlynn, principal chief and governor of the Choctaw nation, follows:

Judge Cooley: The Choctaw and Chickasaw delegations, having substantially completed their business with the Government, cannot think of leaving for their distant homes without some expression of the obligations they feel towards you for the courtesy and personal kindness you have shown them during all the long and protracted negotiations which have terminated in the consummation of the important treaty with us that has recently been ratified, a treaty of more importance probably, in its ends and aims, than any before made with an Indian tribe. In our intercourse with you we have been deeply impressed with the feelings of humanity and kindness towards our race with which you appear to be animated, and we sincerely hope that you will be greatly successful, during your administration of Indian affairs, in carrying out your views and policy for the amelioration of the condition of the Indian tribes. They greatly need a true friend in your position, and we believe you to be such.

The cane was inscribed: "From the Choctaw and Chickasaw Delegates, to their friend, D. N. Cooley. July, 1866."

384 LYMAN COOLEY⁷

(*John II*⁶, *I*⁵, *Daniel III*⁴, *II*³, *I*², *Benjamin*¹), s. John II and Margaret (Barlow), No. 328, b. Aug. 11, 1792, Canandaigua, Ontario Co., N. Y.; d. there Sept. 22, 1849, bur. on the Lyman Cooley Homestead in the family lot, but later (1933) removed to the M. E. Cooley lot on the bank of the Sucker Brook in the Woodlawn Cemetery.

Lyman Cooley was born in the Judge Taylor house in Canandaigua Village, where his father, John Cooley II, lived when he first came from Mass. about 1790. It was in this house that his mother, Margaret Barlow, died when Lyman was a year old. After her death, Lyman was taken back to Granville, Mass., to live with his grandfather, John Cooley I, and his second wife, Phebe (Pratt) Cooley. He stayed with them until his father remarried, in 1795, when he was sent for, and made his home with his father and step-mother.

He received most of his education through the kindness of a friend who gave him access to his library. He became a school teacher at an early age, before he had acquired any knowledge of grammar.

Lyman grew into a man of distinguished local reputation. He was constable, and Justice of the Peace, and was known thereafter as Squire Lyman Cooley. He was constantly occupied in his community by business outside his farm.

The Lyman Cooley Homestead consisted of 190 acres of land belonging to Nathaniel Nourse of Massachusetts, who owned, at one time, most of the land along the road leading north from the later Ab Smith place (1881). This road was known as Cooley Road. Lyman sent a number of barrels of wheat flour to Nourse for rent. When Nourse died, he willed this 190-acre farm to Lyman Cooley. Nourse also gave a 200-acre farm, lying to the south of the Lyman Cooley farm, to Lucina (Bissell) Cooley, Lyman's step-mother. The two properties became known as the Lyman Cooley Homestead, and the John B. Cooley Homestead, respectively.

Lyman Cooley married on the evening of Sept. 25, 1814, in Canandaigua, N. Y., Eunice Blake⁵, b. 1794, Litchfield, Conn., d. July 1, 1847, bur. with her husband in the family burying ground on the homestead, and removed in 1933 to the M. E. Cooley Lot in Woodlawn Cemetery, Canandaigua.

The following paper is in the handwriting of Lyman Cooley; it was signed by him and seven others. No date is entered, but the association was organized probably between 1842 and 1847. The paper is quoted in full because of the interest in Temperance throughout the country at about this period; it probably indicates the view held by those opposing intemperance.

TEMPERANCE ASSOCIATION OF SCHOOL DISTRICT NO. 1
Canandaigua, New York

WHEREAS, the cause of temperance has latterly engrossed the attention of many of our most worthy and philanthropick citizens, we deem it our duty to take the subject into consideration and express with candor our views upon it.

We are aware that intemperance has no advocates, even among its votaries, and that it is not susceptible of vindication. We are also of opinion that it is not only commendable, but an imperative duty for individuals and communities to endeavor to reclaim those whose passions and appetites have led them into such intemperate habits as to degrade them in the eyes of a respectable and intelligent community, and not less so to guard the temperate against falling into the same error. We are also sensible and every days experience may show conclusively to every person that immoderate zeal swells into a fault, and by it the best intentions are frequently made to produce the worst of consequences.

It is equally evident that extensive combinations formed and carried into effect by the patriotick and philanthropick to remove some unknown evil are in danger of being perverted by the artful and designing (who are to be found foremost in all popular measures) for their own selfish purposes and eventually produce evils more to be dreaded than those already complained of; that is, the establishment of arbitrary power on the credulity of their more worthy associates, without allowing them to choose between military, civil, or ecclesiastical. We also feel willing to admit that at this day of improvement and reform this community would be highly culpable for neglecting to contribute its share to those laudable undertakings.

THEFORE, RESOLVED

- First:* That those present inhabitants of School District Number 1 in Canandaigua hereby express themselves friendly to the cause of temperance and are willing to promote on reasonable principles.

LETTER FROM LYDIA NOURSE (DA. NATHANIEL NOURSE) TO LYMAN COOLEY

Salem, Mass. August 5th, 1817

Dear Sir:

It is most probable that you will be surprised at my presuming to trouble you with this. I would fain make an apology but could offer none which would satisfy myself, therefore I shall give up the attempt, and immediately proceed to the inquiries my father has directed me to make concerning Mr. Sheldon. He has heard nothing from him since we left your neighborhood when Mr. S. promised to write often and to make us a visit the next spring. As he has neglected both my father wants to know what he has been doing, if any accident has happened to him or if he has been practising any frauds, if his farm has been sold for the payment of the direct tax. If it has and the right of redemption is not already expired, he wishes you to let him know as soon as possible or to redeem it yourself and charge the account to him and he will be glad to satisfy you for your trouble.

Perhaps this may be unintelligible, and I must try to explain it. For we are not sure that this extra or direct tax as it is called is collected in your State in the same manner that it is in this. Here it is assessed and collected by United States officers and if not paid in a short time they advertise and sell the whole estate for what it is taxed and if not redeemed in two years it is forfeited. In this place a number of mortgages has been lost, in this way, that is by the debtors taking advantage of the law and of circumstances allowing their estates to be sold by the collectors for the payment of their direct tax, when the creditor was absent and knew nothing of it till the right of recovery was past and by that means lost their debts while they supposed them perfectly safe, not knowing there was such a law in the State.

Will you be so good as to return us an answer so soon as you conveniently can. If Mr. Sheldons farm has been sold it is likely you must know it, if not it may easily be ascertained by applying to the collector, and you will much oblige us.

I beg you to excuse this freedom and to impute it to the friendship that has been impressed on us by the many favours and kind offices we have received from you and your family. We send our best wishes to them all. Give my love to Mrs. Cooley. That all are hearty and happy is the sincere wish of your friend.

385 CAPT. JOHN BENJAMIN COOLEY⁷

John B. Cooley was three years old when his father died and his widowed mother was left to raise her family. She rented the farm to various persons until John B., a sturdy, self-reliant lad, reached the age of twelve. A tenant had just left the farm and Mrs. Cooley was preparing to engage another, when her son proposed to undertake to carry on the farm for that season. With some doubt his mother permitted him and he was successful, and for years the land was cultivated by him.

He was educated in the common schools, and when he reached the age of eighteen attended the academy for a year, splitting rails to pay his board. During this time his brother-in-law, Orson Wilcox, rented and carried on the farm. John B. Cooley's mother died in 1847, and he became the manager of the farm of 200 acres willed to his mother by Nathaniel Nourse of Salem and Boston, Mass. He was its manager for fifteen years before he held deed to the property, which he gradually extended to four hundred and thirty-nine acres.

John B. Cooley was a successful farmer; he engaged in a mixed husbandry. Sheep-raising was combined with wheat-growing; five hundred fine Merino sheep grazed at one time, while seventy acres of wheat ripened at a single harvest. Durham cattle, and the best breeds of swine, were on his farm. He was one of the leaders of the Ontario Agricultural Society; not active in politics, but Democratic in principle, and independent in action. He was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, joining in 1832.

John B. Cooley married twice: (1) Feb. 18, 1836, Adaline Cooley⁷, da. Grove⁶ and Jerusha (*Thomas*⁵, *Daniel III*⁴, *II*³, *I*², *Benjamin*¹), Family 336; d. Jan. 28, 1852, Canandaigua; m. Marshall (New York), May 29, 1829

Dear & Respected Friends,

Agreebly to a promise made you upon leaving Canandaigua I now seat myself for the purpose of penning a few lines informing you of our safe arrival at Marshall. After leaving you at Canandaigua we had a very pleasant although somewhat rough ride to Palmyra, arrived there just at tea time, had no difficulty at all in finding Mr. Hibbards. Dency was some surprised at seeing us, said she did not expect we was coming that way. We found her well and neat as wax. She appears to be very pleasantly situated indeed. We stayed there until the next day noon when Mr. and Mrs. Hibbard accompanied us down to the canal and saw us on board a Packet Boat where we found accommodations and very pleasant company. We got into Utica the next afternoon at six, the captain saw that our baggage was taken to the stage house so we had no trouble with that. Upon our arriving there we found that the stage that we wished to take had been gone two hours and there was no other going out to Waterville until the next afternoon at four so we had but one alternative either to hire a team or stay there for the stage which we did not like the thoughts of very well as we were so near home, and therefore engaged a carriage. Left Utica at seven had a very rough ride home [Marshall, N. Y.], arrived at ten just as the family had retired for the night they however made no complaints about getting up again when they found who had come. They had been looking for us for two weeks every day... We found the family well as usual and about as I left them in the winter. Ma has been very well most of the time since I left home, says she has had to work rather harder than she would like to, says now I have got home I have got to go to work, and I think as much; by the way, they have me to tell them sometimes I will go back to Attica which they appear to be very well suited with providing I leave Mary here. [Who this Mary is is not known; she probably is a friend of Mary Greensleet's whom Mary Greensleet had visited in Attica, and brought home with her].

Mary appears to like it very much here has not been homesick at all. Ma says she does not intend to let her go back to Attica very soon, that is, if we can keep her. Ma sends her love to Adaline [Adaline (Cooley) Cooley, first wife of John B. Cooley⁷, above], says she should be very happy to receive a visit from her and her husband trusts that she shall see them in the winter it is but a short distance the most is to start we should all be very glad to see you. Pa & Ma unite in sending their respects to your mother [Lucina (Bissell) Cooley, John B. Cooley's mother], say they should be very much pleased to receive a visit from her. Ma was very much obliged for the sugar, says she never saw nicer. Mary has not heard from home since we left there, she has been sorely afflicted with the teeth ache ever since she has been here...

I will close by wishing you a long life of happiness and prosperity.

Yours truly,
Mary C. Greensleet

We shall expect an answer please soon direct to Waterville, Oneida Co.

(The following letters are from Catherine T. Benson, who later became the second wife of John B. Cooley⁷. In 1852, only about a month after the death of his first wife, Adaline (Cooley) Cooley (d. Jan. 28, 1852), apparently John B. Cooley proposed to Catherine T. Benson; in February and March she was not disposed to favor his suit; but on July 14, 1852, she became his second wife; she wrote her brother again in 1867 as the wife of John B. Cooley).

Springport, Cayuga Co., New York

Dear Brother,

I received your letter in due season, but delayed answering it because we expected you would be out here soon, but I have about given up looking for any of you. We are well as usual at present, but I have had the hardest cold I ever had in my life I believe, and I was about sick for a few days. Mary has been sick with a lame back, but is well now.

There seems to be a good deal of sickness in your neighborhood since I left there, every account that I have from there brings news of some one being sick. There have been three funerals here since I came back, one was old Mrs. Clark, another was a child of Philip Yawger's, and the other was Horatio Ingraham, I presume you recollect his being in the neighborhood last summer and leaving for the south. He came home about two months ago sick with consumption, and died a few days ago & was buried after the order of Odd Fellows.

I have had a visit & an offer of marriage from Mr. J. B. Cooley & answered him No, as politely & kindly as I knew how to, but he did not seem satisfied with that, but wished me to think of it awhile & consult my friends and write him an answer. I told him that I would do so. I presume I should have thought more favorably of it if he had no offered himself quite so soon, but I must say that he plead his case well, & I suppose he has consulted with you about it as he asked the privilege of doing so & I told him that he might do as he pleased. If you have any advice to give me I am ready to receive it but I think that you will not advise me to take such a step.

Springport (New York)
March 2nd, 1852

Dear Friend,

By that title allow me to call you, although I must say that I cannot accept your proposal. I have thought of the subject seriously and kindly, but I cannot say favorably. Marriage at best is a fearful venture when entered into with the most favorable prospects, it is

I have always thought and said that I would not marry a man who had a family of children; the position of a second wife in such a case is anything but an enviable one. It is a position the duties of which but very few are qualified to discharge satisfactorily and pleasantly, and I know that I am not one of that number. It is a responsibility at least which I do not wish to assume. I hope that you may find some one more worthy of your love and better qualified over your affairs than I am. I wish you to consider this as a decided answer.

You may think perhaps that I have been influenced in making my decision by my friends, but such is not the case. They told me frankly what they thought of it, but left me free to decide for myself. They felt that it would be on my part a sacrifice of ease and comfort, and a great responsibility to assume. With many kind wishes for your welfare I remain your friend.

Sherman Cooley emigrated to Trumbull Co., Ohio, in 1832, and from there to Belmont, Wis., in 1857. In 1870 he bought 55 acres of farmland in Grant Co., Wis., later enlarging his home place to 100 acres, with fine improvements. His house was two-storied, 18 x 24 in size; the barn was 34 x 40, with a basement stable.

In politics a Democrat, in religion a free thinker, Sherman Cooley was a man of repute in his places of residence. He held the office of Justice of the Peace in Trumbull Co., Ohio, and Grant Co., Wis. He served on the School Board in Wisconsin. On Oct. 4, 1880, he and his wife celebrated their Golden Wedding in Lima, Grant Co., Wis. Among other guests (there were 17 grandchildren and 5 great-grandchildren) was Morgan Cooley⁷ (No. 392), Sherman's younger brother, who related the story of Sherman's wedding at the Granby meeting-house, and recalled how the bride and groom were dressed. "Sherman wore a swallow-tailed coat, and a bell-crowned plug hat; the bride wore a drab-colored silk dress, a white belt around the waist with a sash attached, and a deep ruffle around the neck, and a white silk headdress." The white belt, having turned golden in the fifty years since, was worn by Mrs. Diana (Day) Cooley at her Golden Wedding.

†A biography of Judge Thomas M. Cooley is in process of completion by Prof. Lewis G. Vander Velde, Director of the Michigan Historical Collections, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor. To date no biography of the Judge has been published. One was begun more than 25 years ago by Judge Henry Wade Rogers of the New York federal district court, but was cut short in 1928 by his death; he had retired from the bench to work on the book. The Rogers material has been made available to Prof. Vander Velde, who graciously approved the factual material presented in the brief sketch of Judge Thomas M. Cooley's life given here.

Thomas McIntyre Cooley was a distinguished writer on constitutional and historical subjects, and the first authority in the United States, and consequently in the world, on the subject of constitutional limitation of state legislative powers. Certainly he was one of the most distinguished of American jurists. His position as a lawyer of the first rank was held for more than thirty years following the Civil War. His books are still authorities in their field.

He was born in Attica in 1824, one of fifteen children. His father, Thomas Cooley II, removed from Massachusetts to New York State, living for a while in Ontario County, to which place his cousin, John Cooley II, had gone in 1790. Thomas Cooley's first wife, Dency (Cook), is buried in Canandaigua, N. Y. His second wife was Rachel Hubbard, da. Revolutionary Soldier John Hubbard, who lived in Granville, Mass., where both Thomas Cooley II and Rachel Hubbard were born. There were thirteen children by this second marriage; Thomas McIntyre Cooley was his father's tenth child, and the eighth child of the second marriage.

Thomas McIntyre Cooley grew up on his father's farm near Attica, where the family remained until removing, about 1840, to Darien, N. Y., where Thomas Cooley II owned a farm, and where he died. There was not a great deal of money, but Thomas Cooley II insisted upon a sound academic education for all of his children. Thomas McIntyre spent a great deal of time in the woods. Throughout his life his interest in trees and shrubs was pronounced. He frequently surprised members of his family by naming some uncommon plant along the wayside with which none was familiar. He was particularly fond of fruit-culture; in his early days in Michigan he was Secretary of the Lenawee County Horticultural Society, and even after he was in Ann Arbor, until too greatly pressed by the many demands upon his time, he devoted many hours to his fruit trees, being particularly interested in pears.

It may have been during his childhood that he became fascinated with bonfires; at any rate, he never tired of building them, and on the rare occasions when an opportunity was provided, would attend to campfires and bonfires of all kinds.

After finishing his general schooling in Attica, he spent several terms teaching school. In 1844, when he was twenty years old, he went to Palmyra, N. Y., and began the study of law in the offices of Theron K. Strong, afterwards a Justice of the New York Supreme Court. From the moment that he undertook the study of law, he seems to have devoted every energy to the subject to the exclusion of all else—including keeping in close contact with members of his family, for his brothers and sisters rarely heard from him. It was not until he was well past middle life that he became interested in his family. (During his later years in Ann Arbor, he and Mortimer E. Cooley used to talk about the Cooley Family, and Judge Cooley became much interested in his ancestry. He was particularly pleased when he found the source of his middle name, McIntyre, which was given him in memory of his great grandmother, Frances McIntyre, the wife of Daniel Cooley III⁴ (No. 273). The legend of her saying that she was “born and bred a lady, and would not live a peasant’s life,” apparently made an impression on many of her descendants.)

After spending a year in Palmyra, Thomas went to Adrian, Mich., where he continued his law studies in the office of Tiffany & Beaman, holding, as well, the offices of deputy clerk and deputy register in chancery.

The year 1846 proved a memorable one for him. He was admitted to the bar, began his law practice, and was married, on December 30, to Mary Elizabeth Horton, daughter of David and Betsey (Cary) of Adrian. The Hortons had moved to Adrian from Darien.

Thomas spent the first two years of his law practice in Tecumseh, Mich., in partnership with Consider A. Stacy. In 1848 he returned to Adrian as a partner in the firm of Beaman & Cooley (later, Beaman, Beecher & Cooley). He spent the years of 1850-1852 in Toledo, Ohio, where he was an unsuccessful candidate for the office of district judge, and then returned to Adrian, this time as a partner in the firm of Cooley & Crosswell.

This period in Adrian in the early and only quiet days of his career was a pleasant one. With his father-in-law, David Horton, he managed a large farm near Adrian. His first three children were born in Adrian. He served as circuit court commissioner and village recorder. In Adrian he lived in a house on Broad St., later at the corner of Clinton and Taylor Sts.

One report, which cannot be verified because no issue of the date can be found, has it that he was editor of the Adrian Watchtower in 1848, which was edited in favor of the Van Buren campaign of that year. It is known that he was editor of the Watchtower in 1852 and 1853. His partner, Fernando C. Beaman, campaigned vigorously in Lenawee County for Van Buren in 1848, but no first-hand evidence exists concerning Cooley's politics at this time. From correspondence it can be assumed that he was a free-soiler in 1850. But because he was a vigorous supporter of anti-slavery movements, he may properly be regarded as identified with the anti-slavery principles of the Republican Party from its beginning in 1854.

In connection with his affiliation with the Republican Party in later years, Mortimer E. Cooley tells an interesting story. During Grover Cleveland's first term, Judge Cooley had been appointed to the Interstate Commerce Commission. When Cleveland ran for his second term, in 1892, everybody was querying whether the Judge, nominally a Republican, would vote for Cleveland or not. The Dean says:

I had occasion to go to Chicago, and stopped as usual at the Auditorium House. While registering, some reporters looked over my shoulder, saw the name Cooley and that I was from Ann Arbor. They assumed quite naturally that I was the Judge's son, and insisted that I tell them how the Judge would vote, whether for Cleveland or not. I told them I was not the Judge's son, and had no idea how he'd vote.

They wrote half or three-quarters of a column in the Daily News, in which I was quoted as telling all about what the Judge would do. Next day I went to the editor and explained to him what I had told the reporters, and asked him to correct it. He picked up a copy of the paper, read the article, and said, "That reads pretty well — guess I'll let it stand." With that I took a copy of the paper, caught the train and returned to Ann Arbor, going directly to the Judge's house. As usual he was reading in the Library. I passed him the paper and said, "If you'll read that, I'll explain how it happened." He said, after looking it over carefully, "Young man, if you can stand it, I guess I can." I then caught the next train and went back to Chicago to transact my business.

Judge Cooley stayed in Adrian, practising law, and managing the farm with his father-in-law, until in 1857 the legislature of Michigan chose him to compile the general statutes of the state. This was the first important recognition he received. His compilation of the statutes of Michigan has remained a model for those since that time. During the same year the Michigan Supreme Court was reorganized and he was appointed Reporter, a position which he held until 1864 when he was appointed a Justice of the Michigan Supreme Court to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judge Manning. He was a Justice of this Court until 1885.

During the period of his justiceship, in connection with colleagues of unusual judicial ability, he did much to give the Michigan Supreme Court an enviable reputation throughout the United States for the soundness and clearness of its decisions. He wrote the opinions in many important cases; these opinions still stand as precedents of decisions in other states, as well as in Michigan.

Shortly after becoming Reporter for the Court, he was offered the Jay Professorship of Law in the newly established Law Department at the University of Michigan. He accepted, and took his family to Ann Arbor in 1859. He held this professorship for twenty-five years, and certainly no one will deny that the prestige and standing of the University of Michigan Law School was due, in no small measure, to the dignity and reputation which he brought to it.

During his professorship at the University of Michigan he lectured widely on legal and constitutional subjects; after his resignation he lectured on history and political science topics, both at Cornell University, other colleges, and to general audiences. His reputation as a lecturer, however, rested largely upon his legal studies. He addressed fellow members of his profession throughout the nation, speaking before the bar associations of South Carolina, Georgia, Michigan, New York and elsewhere, as well as the national association. In 1894 he was president of the American Bar Association. When Johns Hopkins University was organized, he was invited to deliver lectures on constitutional law and municipal government to special classes there, and did so. He was a special lecturer on interstate commerce at Yale University.

In 1883, Judge Cooley was asked by the presidents of the Baltimore & Ohio, the Pennsylvania, the Erie, and the New York Central railways, to serve on a board of arbitration to settle the question of "the difference in rates that should exist both eastwardly and westwardly, upon all classes of freight between the several terminal Atlantic ports." These railroads, after many disastrous rate wars, had finally settled upon a system apparently discriminating against New York and Boston, and favoring Philadelphia and Baltimore. It was to settle the charge of such discrimination that the board, consisting of Senator A. G. Thurman, ex-Minister E. B. Washburn and Judge Cooley, was set up.

In 1887, the Interstate Commerce Commission was established by Congress by the Interstate Commerce Act of that year. It was designed chiefly to prevent railroads from charging exorbitant and discriminatory rates, though its powers have increased in later years. It was evident that this new Commission was to have great power, however, and it seemed to be of the highest importance that outstanding men be selected for its original membership in order to establish sound precedents in the interpretation of the law. President Grover Cleveland urged Judge Cooley to accept the six-year appointment on the Commission; upon doing so, he was chosen Chairman by his colleagues. It is generally conceded that to his judgment and opinions in matters of vital importance to the railway systems of the country, much of the reputation and prestige of the Commission is due.

But it is not upon his accomplishments as a state Supreme Court Justice, law professor, lecturer, and as first Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, eminent as these are, that the lasting reputation of Judge Thomas McIntyre Cooley rests. For it was as an author that he made his outstanding contribution as a jurist.

In 1868, he wrote his Treatise on the Constitutional Limitations which rest upon the Legislative Power of the States of the American Union (2 Vols., 8th ed., 1927), a brilliant study in an original field, and one which is considered a landmark of American constitutional history. His other best known books were Treatise on the Law of Taxation (1876; 4th ed., 1924; 2 vols.), and Treatise on the Law of Torts (1879; 4th ed., 3 vols., 1932), and General Principles of Constitutional Law (1880; Italian edition, 1891; 4th ed., 1931).

When Bryce began his great work, The American Commonwealth, he communicated extensively with Judge Cooley, and the notes in his complicated work showed his reliance upon the opinions of the Judge.

Judge Cooley was the author of an impressively extensive list of essays and articles on legal topics, most of which appeared in leading legal and general periodicals. A very large collection of Judge Cooley's correspondence, together with his interesting diaries for the years 1879 to 1894, is preserved in the Michigan Historical Collections of the University of Michigan. Mr. Boyd, librarian of the Interstate Commerce Commission, made up a very carefully prepared bibliography of Judge Cooley's writings, only a few of which are mentioned here.

He was editor of the Department of Constitutional Law of the Standard Dictionary of New York, from 1891 to 1894. He contributed the section, "The Federal Supreme Court and Its Place in the American Constitutional System," to The Constitutional History of the United States as Seen in the Development of American Law, an 1899 publication of lectures given before the Political Science Association of the University of Michigan. He edited Story's Commentaries on the Constitution of the United States, with additional commentaries on the new amendments, (1873, 2 vols.), the Michigan volume in the American Commonwealths series, entitled Michigan: A History of Governments (1885; 4th ed., rev., 1905); he edited Blackstone's Commentaries on the Laws of England (1871; 4th ed., 2 vols., 1899); Michigan Court of Chancery Reports (1872), and a 25 page report called Acquisition of Louisiana (1887).

Throughout his lifetime, Judge Cooley was an indefatigable worker. Of him his son, the well-known sociology professor and author, Charles Horton Cooley, once wrote:

My father was never in Europe. The only vacations I remember his taking before his health failed were a visit of about two weeks in the Keen Valley of the Adirondacks in 1881, with my mother and three children, and a few days grayling fishing on the Au Sable River in northern Michigan about the same time. He was very active and restless at both times; he wanted to be doing something all the time. We climbed the Giant, the Noon-Mark, and other mountains. Father did not know how to rest. There was no desipere in loco in him.

Perhaps it was because of the strain of continuous and exacting work over so long a period of time that his health failed while he was serving as Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission. He spent the last years of his life in various health resorts, unsuccessfully seeking to regain his health, and died, September 12, 1898, aged 74, at his home in Ann Arbor. The home of Judge Cooley served as the first Union Building of the University of Michigan, and the site of the new Union.

The following recollection concerning Thomas M. Cooley, written to his granddaughter, Edith (Cooley) Baker⁹, by Carrie (Curtis) Sustins⁸, daughter of Thomas M. Cooley's sister, Annette (Cooley) Curtis, is given here because it is of genuine interest as picturing the boyhood of Thomas M. Cooley.

I think my grandfather (Thomas Cooley II) was a very hard man to get along with, and very much set in his way. Mother (Annette Cooley) said when Uncle Thomas M. was sent out into the field to plough, he took a book with him and after ploughing a few rounds, he would stop his team and let them rest while he read a few lines in his book, which he committed to memory while ploughing some more furrows. This did not meet with his father's approval, for Thomas was one of the older boys, and Grandfather thought he should stay on the job and help with the work.

It must have been late in the fall or winter when Thomas M. decided to leave home, for Mother said they had got up a big pile of wood to be cut into stove-wood. Uncle Thomas bet his father he could chop the pile up in a given time; Grandfather bet he couldn't, and told Thomas M. if he did, he would pay him $5 for his work.

Well, Thomas M. got up early in the morning and began chopping at the woodpile. He chopped all but one big log, and that he cut with a saw, then split it into stovewood, and completed the job in the given time. He went and got Grandfather to come and look at the wood and see that the job had been done in the given time.

When Grandfather looked at the pile, he said to Thomas M., "You did not chop it all; you sawed that big log, so I'll not pay you the $5." Thomas M. said nothing, but he went in the house and told Grandmother Cooley he was through working on the farm, kissed her goodbye, and at bedtime said goodnight to the family, and went to his room.

Next morning Grandfather called Thomas M. as usual to get up and help with the chores. When he got no response, he took the horse whip and went upstairs, saying, "I'll teach Thomas to get up when called." He came down a few minutes later, and said to Grandmother, "The boy has gone. His bed has not been slept in." Grandmother said nothing.

There was a woodshed just under a window in Thomas M.'s room, and after everyone except his Mother had gone to sleep, he had let himself down on to the roof of the woodshed, and started afoot for Buffalo, N. Y. In a few days his family received a letter from Alanson Cooley, a half-brother of Thomas M., saying that Thomas was there in Buffalo with him, and had entered a law office to study law. Alanson advised Grandfather not to come after him, for Thomas M. would not go home with him if he did come. Thomas M. was 16 at this time.

Thomas M. did not return home until after his 21st birthday. When he did, he did not enter the house, but walked up and down the road in front of the house. Finally Grandmother saw him and said to Grandfather, "There is a young man in the road; he has been walking up and down past the house, and every time he looks this way when he passes. He looks like Thomas."

Grandfather went out and met him, and asked him to come into the house.

(*Daniel*⁶, *Thomas I*⁵, *Daniel III*⁴, *II*³, *I*², *Benjamin*¹), s. Daniel and Lucinda (Austin), No. 338, b. about 1815, Attica, N. Y.; early removed to a farm about 15 miles from Rochester, Minn. The following stories are told about him:

At a time the Orville Cooley family befriended an old Indian, giving him supper and breakfast, and as he would not sleep in a bed, he spent the night sleeping on the floor in a blanket. He often visited in the Orville Cooley home.

One day alarm was given of an Indian uprising, and the Cooleys, like all their neighbors, fled — they had to leave a horse, tied in a stall, which they were unable to take with them. The boys joined the defense of the community against the Indians.

After hostilities were over, the settlers came back to the settlement, where they found all the houses destroyed. As they reached the top of a rise from which the village could be seen, one of the men called, "Cooley! Cooley! Your buildings are all standing!" And true enough, Cooley's buildings were the only ones standing. Nothing in the house or barns was harmed. Even the horse in the barn had not been taken. He had starved to death. The old Indian, however, was never seen again.

Orville Cooley had a son whose name is not recalled by members of the family, who was killed when attempting to stop a runaway team. Young Vernon Cooley⁹, his son, hung to the tongue of the wagon, and the team stopped after a couple of miles. The boy Vernon came out unhurt, and the three children, Lucy, Vernon and May, were brought up by their grandfather, Orville Cooley.

 b. Mar. 15, 1839, Rochester, N. Y.; d. there Feb. 7, 1875; unm. During the Civil War he served from the beginning until the final review in New York in 1865.
 When home on his first furlough he received a medal on which were engraved the names of 17 battles in which he had been then engaged. He was taken a prisoner once and sent to Andersonville, but being an officer was soon exchanged, returned to Rochester and formed a Regiment of Cavalry of which he was Captain.
 His good luck continued. Returning to battle, he was in action until the end of the War. Once, when not in battle, his horse and another collided with such force that both horses were killed; he was knocked insensible for two days, and this was the only injury he received during the War. After the death of her husband, he lived with his sister, Julia Catherine (Cooley) Willson. One dark and stormy night on his way home he stepped in front of an engine and was killed.

405 GEORGE LUMAN COOLEY⁷

(*Philemon Stiles*⁶, *Daniel IV*⁵, *III*⁴, *II*³, *I*², *Benjamin*¹),
 s. Philemon Stiles and Eliza Dean (Morse), No. 343,

b. Jan. 27, 1843, Rochester, N. Y.; d. Jan. 14, 1937, Kensico, N. Y., bur. in the Actor's Friend Plot. He was 94 years of age.

George Luman Cooley was an eminent actor under the name of George Gaston. A clipping from the March 25, 1936, Rochester Times Union, is of considerable interest, and is given below. He married, about 1890, Mrs. Charlotte Cammeyer of New York City; they had no children.

FIRES, FLOODS, NOTHING NEW TO NONAGENARIAN BORN HERE

The Johnstown flood of 1889 chased Uncle George to high ground, but it couldn't worry the man who'd been through the Chicago fire, and marooned on a Genesee River flood before that.

"Providence saved us," cried the woman Uncle George assisted to safety. "I guess running helped some," Uncle George commented.

It takes more than floods and fires to disturb Uncle George Cooley — uncle to the Misses Edna and Bertha Willson of 828 University Ave. (See Family 343) — now in his 94th year after a career of 60 years on the stage, and the record of being one of the first three Western Union boys in Rochester. He resides now in the Actor's Home, Englewood, N. J., and still living in the future, he won't reminisce about the past; his nieces had to supply the story about him.

He was born Jan. 27, 1832 (error, b. 1843) in the Old Third Ward of Rochester, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Philomenon (Philemon) Cooley. A singer and musician, he sang and played at North Presbyterian Church, Central Presbyterian Church, and St. Patrick's Cathedral.

At the age of 13, in 1855, when Western Union Telegraph Co. was organized in Rochester, he was one of its first three messenger boys, and hence was probably one of the first Western Union boys in the world.

After a brief illness he returned to work for the Western Union, and then went on the stage under the name of George Gaston, never to give up a theatrical career until he was 80 years old. He started out as a musician — his family, of New England stock, thought little of actors — but in an emergency he took a role in a play and never could resist the footlights' lure again.

Generally he played juvenile roles — on his 80th birthday he was still a stage juvenile. He appeared in both legitimate drama and musical shows, playing here in the old Corinthian, Baker's, and the Lyceum. He played in all the Gilbert & Sullivan shows, and appeared 1,000 times in a role in David Crockett, acted with Charlotte Cushman, Blanche Beach, E. S. Willard, Thomas Keene and others. He refused offers to go to Europe because he wouldn't cross the ocean.

And that his days may not be wasted now, he appears in benefit performances for the ill or needy, and studies foreign and ancient languages.

William Scudder Cooley⁷ was for many years identified with the educational interests of Philadelphia. He was a graduate of Princeton College, and for a number of years was associated with its faculty. From there he went South, teaching several years in Virginia and North Carolina, and then to Philadelphia where he established a select classical academy of which he remained the head for thirty-five years. He was one of the oldest as well as ablest instructors in Philadelphia; many prominent men in church and state who came under his training and tuition in early life, bore testimony to the thoroughness and efficiency with which he conducted his system of teaching.

He was well known in literary circles, and was highly esteemed for his mental endowments and cultural attainments. His disposition was genial and social, and he possessed to a marked degree that faculty often found wanting in men of varied learning—that of imparting his knowledge to those around him.

(Upon the death of his father, Rev. Eli Field Cooley, Prof. William S. Cooley came into possession of papers his father had collected, and he continued the researches made by his father. For many years he devoted much time to verifying and amplifying the family records found in the Genealogy of Early Settlers in Trenton and Ewing, "Old Hunterdon County," New Jersey (pub. Trenton, N. J. 1883) upon which this material is based. Among his papers is found a quotation from Dr. De Witt's Journal, "Though everyone ought to rest on his own merits, yet it is pleasant to trace one's lineage over a line of honest and honorable ancestors, with here and there one, perhaps, overtopping the rest and shedding the lustre of his character on the whole line."

(Upon the death of William Scudder Cooley, Feb. 7, 1882, the manuscript notes of Eli Field Cooley⁶ and William Scudder Cooley⁷ came into the possession of Miss Hannah L. Cooley⁸ of Ewing, Mercer Co., N. J.,

437 ALBERT BLAKE COOLEY⁸

(*Lyman*⁷, *John II*⁶, *I*⁵, *Daniel III*⁴, *II*³, *I*², *Benjamin*¹), s. Lyman and Eunice (Blake), No. 384, b. Aug. 9, 1815, Canandaigua, Ontario Co., N. Y., on the Lyman Cooley homestead; d. in Canandaigua July 2, 1886, bur. there in the Albert Eugene Cooley lot, West Avenue Cemetery; m. Aug. 20, 1843, Achsah Bennett Griswold, b. Oct. 17, 1820, d. Dec. 23, 1891, bur. with her husband.

Albert Blake Cooley was a farmer, a hardworking and religious man; he had a truly American point of view regarding education and the discipline of children toward educational ambition and strict honor. Almost every reminiscence of childhood on the part of his children refers in some way to the character and affection of their father. He used to say, "I can't leave you any money, but you'll have an education whether you want it or not." And each of his children got that education. He had a delightful sense of humor, an inviolable code of honor, and an infinite capacity for friendship.

GRISWOLD FAMILY

The complete Griswold ancestry of Achsah Bennett Griswold, wife of Albert Blake Cooley, No. 437, has not been established, though considerable research has been undertaken towards that end.† It is believed that her grandfather, Jabez Griswold, is a fifth generation descendant of Michael Griswold (of Wethersfield, Conn., in 1640), but this lineage has not yet been authentically established. Thus the Griswold Line for this family properly starts with Jabez Griswold, b. 1757.

Jabez Griswold was b. June 8, 1757, place unknown; d. Nov. 25, 1839, at a quarter before seven, in the 83rd year of his age, Watkins, N. Y., bur. in the Watkins Glen Cemetery, where a 10 foot obelisk marks his grave; m. Oct. 20, 1784, Mary Pruitt, b. Jan. 19, 1765, d. Feb. 8, 1843, Watkins, bur. with her husband.

Jabez Griswold served in the Revolutionary War; the following is an extract from a letter from A. D. Hiller, Asst. to Adm., Veterans' Adm., Wash., D. C., to Sen. A. H. Vandenberg, Feb. 1932.

"The following is the record of the only soldier named Jabez (Jabes) Griswold that is found on file in the Rev. War records of this office. The data furnished herein are obtained from the papers on file in pension claim S. 43651, based upon the military service in the Revolutionary War of Jabez Griswold.

†A record of the various researches undertaken to establish the ancestry of Jabez Griswold, b. 1757, has been prepared and turned over to the Griswold Association and to The Institute of American Genealogy, 440 South Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

"He enlisted May 10, 1778, in Lansingburgh, New York, and served as a private under Lt. French in Col. Van Cortlandt's New York Regt., and was discharged Feb. 16, 1779. He afterwards served several short tours in the militia, no details given. (Italics are the compiler's.)

"He was allowed pension on his application executed May 2, 1818, at that time a resident of Ballston, Saratoga Co., N. Y., and 60 years of age (1818-60 = 1757/8). He was residing in 1822 in Catherine, Tioga Co., N. Y., and then transferred to his wife, Mary, as aged 56 years (1822 - 56 = 1765/6), his son James, aged 17 (1822 - 17 = 1804/5), and to another son, whose name and age he did not give.

"The names of parents of Jabez Griswold are not stated."

Extract from letter from Major General, the Adj. General, War Dept., Wash., D. C., Feb. 3, 1932, to Hon. A. H. Vandenberg, U. S. Senate:

"The records show that Jabes (name not found as Jabez) Griswold served as a sergeant in Capt. Shadrach Phelps' Co., Col. Cornelius Douty's 12th Regt. Vermont Militia, Revolutionary War. He served 6 days from Oct. 2 to 8, year not shown, when he was ordered by Gen. Stark to White Creek; and 14 days from Oct. 23 to Nov. 3, year not stated, in the alarm at Castleton." (Note: This military service is also cited in J. E. Goodrich's Soldiers of Vermont.)

The foregoing military records have been given at some length, because a Jabez Griswold, b. 1764, whose ancestry is established from the Immigrant Michael Griswold, is given variously in D.A.R. and other lineages as having had the Revolutionary War record cited by the War Department as belonging to the only soldier by that name, who was b. 1757/8, according to ages, etc., given in his pension claim. The dates used in these Griswold notes are taken from cemetery records and a family Bible owned by the Beahan Family of New York State; unfortunately the places of birth and marriage of Jabez Griswold and his wife, Mary Pruitt, are not given in the Bible.

In 1818, Jabez was living in Ballston, Saratoga Co., N. Y.; in 1822 he lived in Catherine, Tioga Co., N. Y.; his first son, and other children, were born in Dutchess Co., N. Y.

Fort Edward, d. Apr. 8, 1872, Hudson, where she is bur. with her husband.

John Griswold lived in Dutchess, Saratoga, Washington, Steuben and Ontario counties, in New York State, and in 1834/5 emigrated to Michigan, arriving at Hudson, Lenawee Co., Jan. 2, 1835. 438 JAMES SMEDLEY COOLEY⁸

(*Lyman*⁷, *John II*⁶, *I*⁵, *Daniel III*⁴, *II*³, *I*², *Benjamin*¹), s. Lyman and Eunice (Blake), No. 384, b. July 25, 1817, Canandaigua, N. Y., on the Lyman Cooley homestead; d. Dec. 20, 1888, Canandaigua, bur. there in the James S. Cooley lot, Woodlawn Cemetery; m. Mary Elizabeth Sackett⁸, da. of Col. Augustine, Mar. 6, 1851, b. May 20, 1826, d. May 12, 1899, Canandaigua.

James S. Cooley was the founder of the Cooley Hardware Store in 1851, owned and managed by various members of the family for many years. The business originated under the name of J. S. Cooley & Co. Frank Gage was associated with the firm, but after a year or two retired, and his interest was sold to Nathaniel Nourse Cooley⁸ (No. 441), who in 1867 retired because of ill health, and James S. Cooley became the sole proprietor, until in 1878 his son, Augustine Sackett Cooley⁹ (No. 488), became a partner. In 1883 Albert Eugene Cooley (No. 482), nephew of James S. Cooley, became a partner, and about this time the firm became known as J. S. Cooley, Son & Co.

MARY ELIZABETH (SACKETT) COOLEY
1826-1899

JAMES SMEDLEY COOLEY⁸, No. 438

In December, 1888, the man to whose sagacity and enterprise the business success of the company was due departed this earth, esteemed by the community. Fortunately, the younger partners upon whose shoulders the business fell, were men fully equal to the enlarged responsibility, and it is no exaggeration to say that Messrs. A. S. and A. E. Cooley have more than maintained the reputation for fairmindedness begun by the founder of the business. The business now is recognized as one of the most successful and extensive enterprises of the kind in western New York. Not only do they keep an immense stock of light and heavy hardware, including all the latest novelties in tools and household appliances, but they also carry a large line of the most approved designs in stoves and ranges, with kerosene and gasoline stoves, etc. They also have a great assortment of farming implements, tinware, copper and ironware. They keep a large force engaged in manufacturing these because the name is everywhere recognized as a guarantee of material and workmanship. They are building up a wholesale and jobbing trade that promises to attain large proportions. It is such enterprises that insure the continued prosperity and growth of the village (Ontario County Times, Canandaigua, 1893).

James S. Cooley, after a business career extending over a period of nearly forty years, left a record without blot or blemish, and marked throughout by strictest integrity. He was an enterprising, public spirited citizen, honest and conscientious in all his dealings, a kind husband and father, an obliging neighbor, and one who was always ready to extend a helping hand to those in need. He was a member of the Congregational church, and was justly esteemed as one whose consistent Christian character was worthily exemplified in his every-day life (Ontario County Times, Canandaigua, Dec. 21, 1888).

Orion J. Cooley was educated at the old Canandaigua Academy. Although not of robust health because of rheumatism contracted when about 11 years old, he was a successful farmer, because he kept abreast of new ideas and developments and was a good planner and manager. He was always among the first to adopt new machines, new crops and new methods, and to profit by the results of his experimentation. He was a lover of good stock, always having fine horses and pedigreed cattle, hogs, sheep and poultry.

In 1908 he retired from the farm and lived thereafter in Canandaigua. He was for many years an officer of the Ontario Agricultural Society and of the local Grange; he was a life-time member of the Methodist Episcopal church. He was even tempered, tolerant, appreciative, and just; and so enjoyed a host of friends.

He was a Democrat, as were all the members of his family.

(*Thomas (III) McIntyre*⁷, *Thomas II*⁶, *I*⁵, *Daniel III*⁴, *II*³, *I*², *Benjamin*¹), s. Judge Thomas McIntyre and Mary Elizabeth (Horton), No. 395, b. Nov. 15, 1849, Adrian, Mich.; d. Apr. 16, 1938, Lansing, Mich.; m. Dec. 27, 1871, Kate Taylor, da. Gustavus Adolphus and Amy (Denison) of Ann Arbor, Mich., b. May 14, 1850, Ann Arbor, d. May 5, 1931, Lansing.

Eugene F. Cooley moved from Adrian to Ann Arbor with his father when the latter took the Jay Professorship of Law in the University of Michigan Law School. He was graduated from the University with the class of 1870, and played shortstop on the University's first baseball team.

His vacations in 1869 and the summer after his graduation were spent with the United States lakes survey on Lake Superior, as assistant astronomer. In the fall of 1870 he went to Port Huron with James Clements of Ann Arbor to build a gas works there. He married in 1871. In 1872 he moved to Lansing and built the gas works there. He was superintendent of the works for many years until it was sold to the Dawes Brothers of Chicago.

He started a business of his own in connection with the gas works, carrying a stock of gas fixtures and pipe, and had a plumber and his helper who made all gas installations. Later he bought the mill supply department of the Lansing Iron and Engine Works, and this company, later known as the Michigan Supply Company, eventually moved into a building which Judge Thomas M. Cooley built for his son.

When electricity came into use for lighting, Piatt Brothers of Lansing purchased a dynamo, established an electric light plant in a small building and began to light a few of the streets of the city with arc lights. These were also installed in the senate and house of representatives at the Michigan State Capitol in Lansing. Seeing that electricity was sure to come into general use, the gas company bought the plant, moved it into a new building, and soon put in a modern electric plant. Eugene F. Cooley continued to manage both plants until the city of Lansing purchased the electric company.

Judge Thomas M. Cooley, four others, and his son, Eugene F. Cooley, formed the Lansing Wagon Works, of which Eugene Frank Cooley was manager. This company had a long and successful career until automobiles and trucks came to end the "horse and buggy age." For many years the company was the second largest manufacturing establishment in Lansing, and its products went all over the country. Eugene F. Cooley purchased a $10,000 interest in the P. F. Olds and Sons, in order to help finance the first Oldsmobile. He was one of the organizers of the first Oldsmobile company—manufacturers of the curved dash model.

He was one of the founders of the City National Bank, and for many years served as its vice president. He was always among those who subscribed in order to bring new concerns to Lansing, and was one of the organizers of the Lansing Sugar Co. and the Michigan Butter and Egg Co.

He was buried in the Mt. Hope Cemetery, Lansing. This report of his active life is taken from the obituary appearing in The State Journal, of Lansing, for Saturday, Apr. 16, 1938; his photograph, headed by "Pioneer Dies," appears on the front page of this issue of the paper.

No brief summary of his career can do justice to the personality of the man, who was widely loved and respected. (He was tremendously interested in the Cooley Genealogy, and was one of those whose offer of assistance and encouragement was responsible for the original effort to form The Cooley Family Association.)

Oct. 21, 1844, on the Lyman Cooley Homestead, Canandaigua, N. Y.; d. Oct. 16, 1918, Canandaigua, bur. with his parents and his wife in the Albert Eugene Cooley Lot, West Avenue Cemetery.

Albert Eugene Cooley, known affectionately as "Gene," served in the Civil War. He enlisted in 1862 with the 126th Regt. of N. Y. Vols.; they refused to muster him because of his age. The following August he enlisted, in Rochester, N. Y., in the 4th N. Y. Heavy Artillery, and served through many of the bloodiest battles of the War. He was wounded in 1864 at the Battle of Spottsylvania Court House; after many days of hardship and suffering he managed to reach a hospital in Philadelphia, where he was confined nine months. He was transferred to the Veteran Reserve Corps, and served until discharged June 19, 1864, at Point Lookout, Md.

After the war he returned to Canandaigua, finished his education at the Canandaigua Academy, and worked in the Cooley Hardware Store, becoming a partner with his cousin, Augustine Sackett Cooley⁹ (No. 488) in 1883. This business, founded by James Smedley Cooley⁸ (No. 438), later became A. E. Cooley & Co.

483 LYMAN EDGAR COOLEY⁹

(*Albert Blake*⁸, *Lyman*⁷, *John II*⁶, *I*⁵, *Daniel III*⁴, *II*³, *I*², *Benjamin*¹), s. Albert Blake and Achsah Bennett (Griswold), No. 437, b. Dec. 5, 1850, on the Lyman Cooley Homestead, Canandaigua, N. Y.; d. Feb. 3, 1917, 4:35 P.M., Evanston, Ill., bur. in the Rosehill Cemetery, Chicago.

Lyman Edgar Cooley was an eminent civil engineer. Following a course of study, at the Canandaigua Academy he taught there in 1870-72; then attended Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, receiving the Civil Engineer Degree in 1874, after completing the 4-year course in 2 years. He was a member of Phi Beta Kappa and Sigma Xi honorary societies; was given an honorary degree of Doctor of Engineering by the University of Michigan in 1915.

His thesis, written on graduation from Rensselaer, was on "The Feasibility of a Deep Waterway from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico." Thus in 1874 he set his course, and until his death he never deviated from that course. When he died in 1917 he was Chief Consulting Engineer of the Deep Waterway to the Gulf Association, and during his lifetime he was responsible for most of the appropriations for this work. His daughter, Reba Cooley Gill, wrote, in 1939:

A telegram reached him in the middle of a speech to the House in Washington, announcing the necessity of an immediate operation for my mother, and father got ready to leave. A conference was held, a wire was sent, and the answer gave him only a few hours more in Washington. Then the Senate came into the House, and Dad talked all day, and up until midnight when his train left. Dad arrived at the hospital in Evanston just as mother was coming out of the operating room. It is said that not a congressman left the room, except as they went out for food. He got his appropriation. For details, see the Minutes of Congress.

Lyman E. Cooley was a professor at Northwestern University, 1874-77, and was associate editor of Engineering News, 1876-78. He was assistant engineer on the railway bridge over the Missouri River, Glasgow, Mo., in 1878. From 1878 to 1884, he was Assistant U. S. Engineer on the Mississippi and Missouri River Improvements; and in 1884 he became editor of American Engineer. During the following years he was promoter and assistant engineer, then chief engineer and trustee, then consulting engineer, chief engineer and trustee, of the Chicago Sanitary District, during the construction of the famous Drainage Canal of Chicago. Of this work, Public Safety, in its issue of Feb. 12, 1917, says:

Years ago when the Chicago River was a huge sewer, when people had to hold their noses as they crossed the bridges, when the sewage of a city of nearly a million population ran straight into the lake and that water supply was sent back to the people through kitchen faucets to be used once again in cooking, Lyman E. Cooley started to work to build the Chicago Drainage Canal, one of the greatest engineering works undertaken and accomplished in the world. It is a work that has done more for Chicago and for its advancement to the status of the fourth greatest city of the world than anything else that has ever been accomplished in that behalf.

Cooley, engineer and builder, set his mind to work as to how the sewage of the city of Chicago could be kept out of the water supply of the people. He began by a study of geological and topographical conditions of the Mississippi valley. The geologist and the engineer went over the face of the earth, studying strata and stratum, measuring, calculating, mapping, and arriving at accurate conclusions, and Cooley finally had the route of the canal mapped out. He was the man who figured how and when dirt should fly, and how the earth and rock could be cut to form the canal that would convey the sewage of the city of Chicago to the ocean, and on its way to be destroyed by the action of the water. His was one of the achievements of the century.

He was a member of the International Deep Waterways Commission, 1895-96; consultant in Nicaragua in 1897-98 as to the feasibility of the Canal there; advisory engineer in the investigation of $9,000,000 expenditure on the Erie Canal, New York, 1898. He made economic investigations on deep waterway from the Lakes to the Atlantic, in 1899; was consulting engineer of the Union Water Co., Denver (1899-1904), which built the highest masonry dam in the world at that time. He was a member of the U. S. Postal Commission on pneumatic tubes for mail in cities (1901); advisory engineer on Water Works Appraisement of Omaha (1904); engineer of the water power project of damming the Mississippi River at Keokuk, and many other projects. He was Consulting Engineer, Rochester, N. Y., on the location of the barge canal (1904); in Grand Rapids, Mich., on Flood Control (1903-10); and in Saginaw, Mich., on Flood Control, (1912). He was Secretary and Consulting Engineer of the International Improvement Commission of Ill. (1906-09); was Consulting Engineer of the Lakes-to-the-Gulf Deep Waterways Association from 1909 until his death. He was Chairman of the Commission on Sewage Disposal and Water Power Development, of the Sanitary District of Chicago. He served as President of the Western Society of Engineers in 1890. He was a lecturer on waterways topics, and was the author of numerous works and reports, including sections written for the Encyclopaedia Britannica and Americana; he wrote The Lakes and Gulf Waterway: The Diversion of Waters of the Great Lakes; The Illinois Valley Problem, and other waterway literature.

No extracts from Who's Who in America can give a real idea of the reputation of Lyman E. Cooley as an engineer on hydraulic questions. He was honored in the capitals of five European countries, England, France, Belgium, Germany and the Netherlands.

[He was enormously interested in The Cooley Genealogy, and made the 1916 compilations of data, based upon the old "Lyman Cooley Deerskin Roll" which had belonged to his grandfather, Lyman Cooley⁷ (No. 384), and on research done by his brother, M. E. Cooley.]

Lyman E. Cooley m. Dec. 31, 1874, Canandaigua, N. Y., at the MacMillan Homestead, Lusena MacMillan, da. Peter House and Lusena (Towner); she was b. Sept. 29, 1852, East Bloomfield Twp., Ontario Co., N. Y., d. Apr. 15, 1916, 7:45 A.M., at the Evanston Hospital, and is buried with her husband in Rosehill Cemetery, Chicago.

Lusena MacMillan attended the District School in Canandaigua with the Cooley children, and later attended the Ontario Co. Female Seminary. She was active in church, Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work, and was a National Delegate to the Christian Endeavor Convention one year. They lived in Evanston, Ill., where in 1907 she took up jail and prison reform work, and was well known for her accomplishments in this field. She was associate editor, with her husband, of Engineering News (1876-78). In 1884 she accompanied her husband on his river and harbor work in Missouri, Nebraska and Arkansas.

She was a close personal friend of Frances E. Willard, and became an active member of the W. C. T. U.; in 1911-12 was president of the Evanston Chapter. When she died following an operation at Evanston Hospital, she was serving her sixth year as Trustee of the Frances E. Willard Temperance Hospital, Chicago, where there is a Lusena MacMillan Cooley Room which she endowed.

(*Albert Blake*⁸, *Lyman*⁷, *John II*⁶, *I*⁵, *Daniel III*⁴, *II*³, *I*², *Benjamin*¹), s. Albert Blake and Achsah Bennett (Griswold), No. 437, b. May 4, 1853, Lyman Cooley Homestead, Canandaigua, N. Y. Resides Canandaigua; m. Jan. 17, 1898, Mary Murphy, known affectionately as "Mame," b. May 11, 1871, d. May 13, 1921, bur. in the M. E. Cooley Lot, Woodlawn Cemetery, Canandaigua. No children.

C. E. Cooley worked for the Pennsylvania Railroad until retirement. He left the old homestead and became a brakeman, then a conductor, then yardmaster at Canandaigua for 26 years, after which he was returned to his job as conductor, and held this position until retirement at the age of 70. He holds a Roll of Honor from the late President Atterbury of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Together with his brother, M. E. Cooley, C. E. Cooley traveled hundreds of miles all over Ontario and nearby counties, seeking family gravestones and family records.

The following letter from Ernest Linwood Cooley to his brother, C. E. Cooley, should be of interest to readers of this genealogy.

LETTER TO CLARENCE ELMER COOLEY⁹, No. 484,
FROM ERNEST LINWOOD COOLEY⁹, No. 486

(This has been selected as a typical letter between the brothers of this family, and indicates something of the general interest in their family name shared by them all.

Chicago, Illinois, December 1, 1920

Dear Brother,

Since writing the enclosed letter on Thanksgiving Day I have verified some of the historical and genealogical references, and have rewritten some parts of it. In the meantime the typewriting has been delayed by other work. Although I have cut out many connecting details the letter is much longer than originally intended. It easily could have been made ten times as long. You may thank me for not making it longer.

Sincerely,
E. L. Cooley

Thanksgiving Day

C. E. Cooley, Esq.
No. 19 Sly Street
Canandaigua, N. Y.
Dear Old Horse:

As you will notice, the title Esquire has fallen on your shoulders because you are now the eldest in descent from Grandfather Lyman Cooley, Esq. In the old days, the title "Esq." meant more than it means today, and rated above the title "Gent." In those days some of the neighbors used to refer their troubles to Squire Cooley, who adjusted said troubles without a fee. You will also notice I am still harping on my joke that an Old Horse is a Colt somewhat advanced in years. I suppose the old fellows like Ab Miller and Tom Nesbit still call you "Colt," as they did in our boyhood days. Incidentally, Ab and Tom were the champion all-round liars of the country. "Gid" Reed was a bigger and more picturesque liar, but then he lived in the village and had more opportunities.

Do you remember the time you and the old shot gun and Tom Nesbit were over in Sanders' woods hunting rabbits, and how Tom let you shoot at the new winter jacket his mother made for him? He put the jacket inside out on a stump so the shot would not show. But the jacket was padded with cotton batting, and each particular shot made a white cotton tuft on the back side. When Tom put the jacket on he looked like a disappointed sheep. Tom was afraid his mother would whip him, and told her Colt Cooley shot him in the back. She hunted your scalp after that.

Do you remember that Thanksgiving Day over 50 years ago when you and I went over to Sanders' Swamp and cut walking sticks, and then went to Uncle John's to see some fat cattle weighed? About dinner time we raced home. As we ran down into the little hollow below the Graveyard, your left-handed stick got between my legs and threw me all over the frozen road, and I got my hands and knees full of gravel stones. Six years ago I fell on a slippery stone in a Canada trout stream, and my left knee was tender for a month or two. The doctor said the knee-cap had been broken some time. That was the time — over fifty years ago.

Do you remember the time you butchered the big "punkin" and split your knee-cap with the carving knife? You laid the punkin on the old oak bench and swung for the stem. You got the stem and the knee, too. That old carving knife was as big as a broadsword, but not quite so long.

Do you remember the time you stretched the old rope across the backyard from the woodhouse to the cornhouse and nearly pulled the woodhouse down? While you were tightening up on the old windlass, the oak picket broke and the crowbar swung on your head just over the temple and tre-panned your skull. Mother picked out the splinters and saw your brain throb. The fool-killer nearly got you that time.

Do you remember that rainy day before the barns burned in 1865, when Lyman shot the little bantam rooster Uncle Edgar gave you? The little rooster and his two pullets were scratching in the corner stall over by the north porthole. Lyman was standing by the old work bench with a new bow and arrow, and you said he could not hit the rooster. Lyman chirped and the rooster stood as tall as he could, and turned his head sideways to see what that noise was. The arrow hit him in the eye. Good shot!

Do you remember... But the typewriter will get MY scalp if I remember too much.

Going back to our ancestors. I have traced the name Cooley back 870 years to A. D. 1050 in Normandy, but I have not yet found the connection between our line and the European line. Robert Bordet de Culie came to England with William the Conqueror in 1066. Hugh Boudet and Robert Bourdet are on the Dives Roll in the church at Dives where William mobilized his forces and waited for fair weather. Both the Boudet, Bordet, etc., and the Culie, Cowley, Cooley, etc., lines in England, come down from Robert who was a Baron and no doubt came to the Conquest with a company or regiment of his henchmen. One of the meanings of the word "bord" is a shield, or "big shield bearer," a military term like the more modern terms, "horse" and "foot" soldiers. The primitive shield used by the Saxon and North Man at one time was made of a bord, or board. At one time the bow-man carried a big shield which he could stand on the ground and shoot a cross-bow over the top. Such a shield or "bord" might stand as high as the man's shoulders. It is my conjecture that a knight on horseback would carry a shorter and smaller shield than a bow-man, and that such a small shield might be called a "bordet" to distinguish from the big shield or "bord" of the bow-man. Some day I may be able to verify this conjecture.

In the time of the Caesars the area later known as Normandy was occupied by Celtic tribes akin to some of the British tribes across the Channel. Lappenberg states that about A.D. 407-410, a British Army was settled in the province of Bretagne (now Brittany), west of Normandy. Lappenberg also refers to the "Saxon Shore" of Normandy in A. D. 286, and infers that the Saxons settled near Bayeux at that time. But Palgrave states that in the time of Honorius, 395-423, the Saxons settled on the Saxon Shore near Bayeux about 40 miles northwest of Falaise. On Hutton's Map of Gaul showing the campaign of the Hun Attila, A. D. 451, the Saxons occupy the area later known as Normandy. It would appear that the Saxons came to this country 500 or 600 years before the Normans, and may have continued there under the later rule of the Franks.

In fact a Saxon remnant may have continued there under the Norman rule beginning in A. D. 912. The French place name "Falaise," meaning cliff, is a word of German origin akin to Old Saxon "felis" (rock). "Bord" is Anglo-Saxon for board, shield, border, bank, shore, etc. The low German word "borde" is a fertile plain bordering on a river, and is suggestive. It would appear that the name Bord-et is from the Saxon. The French suffix "-et" may be applied as a diminutive. In other words, the "Bordet" family may be of Saxon descent. On the other hand, the French place-name "Culie" might be applied to any man who held the place by feudal tenure. It is not conclusive. The same is true of "Bordet" if it is a place-name and not a patronymic due to vocation.

There are innumerable ways of spelling the name Cooley. There are at least "57" varieties. The pickle man has nothing on the Cooley family. French trappers applied the name Coolée to various ravines and gulches in Idaho, Montana and Wyoming. The name is spelled several ways, and is usually pronounced Cooley. As defined by the Standard Dictionary, "Coulée - a deep gulch or water-channel, usually dry, whose inclined sides distinguish it from a canyon, the walls of which are precipitous." [Compiler's Note: Grand Coulee Dam]. You will find many such places up in the Bristol hills west of Canandaigua Lake. In the hill country around Falaise (cliff) in Normandy, there are three or four places named Ouilly, etc. About eight miles west of Falaise on the road to Vire is "le Pont d'ouilly," a bridge over the river Orne. But I do not know whether Ouilly means the river valley or the ravine from the west down which the road goes to the bridge. The village of "Culai" is 8 or 9 miles up stream from this bridge. About 2 miles downstream is the village of "Ouilly le Basset," called "Quilly-le-Basset" on a recent map, and "Bas" for short on an old map of 1751. In the old feudal days Robert de Culie meant Robert of Culie. He was called by the name of the village which he held by feudal tenure. The prefix de came into England with the Norman Conquest. It originally indicated a man of rank who for military service held a landed estate such as a village or manor.

The distinction was abolished in England by King Edward III, but has since been restored. The name "Delaware" from Lord de la Warr is a familiar survival of an old feudal name; "Delafield," sometimes "Field," is another.

And now for another line of ancestry: The grandson of Benjamin Cooley of Springfield was the second Daniel Cooley, who married the granddaughter of Daniel Clark and Mary Newberry, of Windsor, Conn. Mary Newberry was the daughter of Thomas who came to Dorchester, Mass., in 1634. Sixteen generations back from Thomas, we have Henry de Newburgh, born in the castle of Neufbourg in Normandy, and third cousin to William the Conqueror. This Henry de Newburgh built Warwick Castle, and became the first Norman Earl of Warwick. He was the fifth generation from Torff, sometimes called Torf de Harcourt, who was born about 920. According to Edmondson's Peerage (1764, Vol. III, page 280), Torff was the only son of Bernard the Dane of the Blood Royal of Saxony and Denmark who came into Normandy with Duke Rollo. According to Whiffin (1833, Memoirs of The House of Russell), Torf de Harcourt married Ertemburga de Briguebec, who harks back ten generations to Sigurd Hring, King of Sweden, who was living A. D. 735. This is the first date. The line goes back five generations more to "Olaf the Sharpeyed, King of Berik." Evidently Olaf was the one who saw the other fellow first. Bartlett, in his Newberry Genealogy, 1914, does not go back of Torf, and suggests that "probably he was a grandson of one of the viking chiefs of Scandinavia who accompanied Rollo about 900, in the Norse invasion of Northern France," since called Normandy.

This letter would be as big as a book if I went into the history of the Wolcott, Pitkin, Clark, Macintyre, Barlow, Blake and Griswold families. We have the unverified statement by Cutter that the Hon. Daniel Clark was a direct descendant of King Edward I of England and Queen Eleanora, daughter of King Ferdinand III of Castile, who flourished in the days of the Crusades—sounds like a joke, doesn't it?

Since you are now the eldest male of our Cooley line, you are due to maintain the dignity of the family. From now on you should listen to nothing but classical music.

For two weeks in September I was the guest of Governor Osborn† on his island below the Sault Ste Marie. The woods were full of wild game such as deer, moose, and pheasant. Not far away was a beaver pond and the beaver were at work repairing the dam and cutting the winter supply of wood. Wild ducks were on the pond, lake, and river. The fish were there, too. We cruised for miles up and down the river. My pay was going on all the time, and I could not spend any money. If I had taken my regular vacation in Canada with our Ann Arbor brother† as we had planned, I would have spent at least that two weeks pay. And now I want you to spend it for me. I now have more money than I need. I am due to die in a few years, and what I leave behind will be given for a lot and memorial in Canandaigua for those who have gone before. My library of 4,000 or 5,000 volumes will go to the Wood Library in Canandaigua. The younger generation have the world before them, and can make their own way. Our generation have the world behind us, and the best we can do now is to make a good finish.

Sincerely,
E. L. Cooley

‡Reprinted from the March 1935 issue of Michigan Technic, University of Michigan, College of Engineering student publication. This brief biographical sketch is chosen from among literally hundreds which have appeared during the lifetime of Dean M. E. Cooley, because it is written (1) on the occasion of his 80th birthday; (2) by a student in the College of Engineering to which Dean Cooley devoted 47 years of his life. March 28, 1855, was an important day in the history of the University of Michigan and its Engineering College. It was on this day that Mortimer E. Cooley, the "Grand Old Man" of the College of Engineering, first saw the light of day on a farm near Canandaigua, N. Y. His influence on the engineering college has been so profound that the college has expanded and progressed continuously under his careful direction, and under the principles he laid down. Dean Cooley and the college matured together. They are each a product of the other. The greatness of one has reflected itself in the other, until they have become so interlocked that it is hardly conceivable to think of them apart.

His list of accomplishments at Michigan hardly need be mentioned: they are obvious. He built the College of Engineering from a rough temporary shop with floor space amounting to 1,720 sq. ft. to three large, excellently equipped buildings having a total of some 500,000 sq. ft. of floor space; from three to four courses taught by two instructors, to hundreds of courses taught by a staff of more than 160 professors, instructors, and assistants; from an enrollment of less than 65, to an enrollment of more than 1800.

These are but examples of progress which indicate the energy, ability, and the devotion of the man at the helm. His administration, with unrivaled defiance, even threw a scare into the Literary College. Not only did the enrollment of the Engineering College pass that of the Medical and Law schools, but in addition threatened the record of the Literary college. Professor Goulding, who was then Secretary of the College of Engineering, relates how Cooley, with his characteristic chuckle, exclaimed, "By Jove†, Goulding, we'll pass them yet." And they almost did.

Cooley, after attending Canandaigua Academy, was a teacher in rural schools near home. At nineteen, he took examinations for entrance to the United States Naval Academy and was admitted as a Cadet Engineer. Upon his second trip to Annapolis to report for duty he met Ira N. Hollis, also reporting, and the two became fast friends — a friendship that was intimate and enduring for the many years until Dr. Hollis's death. Dean Cooley's only son, now a Captain in the U. S. Navy, is named Hollis, as is his grandson, Hollis Cooley¹¹.

†"Jove" is not a particularly characteristic exclamation of Dean Cooley, part of his inimitable reputation being founded upon the firm ground of his ability to swear in good sailor fashion, and still ever to remain a gentleman. His colleagues say he is never guilty of profanity; that, instead, he indulges in suitable emphasis.

After he was graduated from the Academy in 1878, Cooley shipped as Cadet Engineer, seeing considerable of the world, and gaining practical experience. In 1881 the Navy Department, authorized by law, detailed him as Assistant Engineer, U.S.N., to the University of Michigan as Professor of Steam Engineering and Iron Shipbuilding. Cooley at this time was 26 years old, and has the distinction of having been a full professor longer than anyone on the campus.†

When Cooley came to Michigan, the field of Mechanical Engineering was new, so the whole development of this important field came under his personal direction. He was given a little shanty costing $1500 in which to display his wares, at that time consisting of Blacksmithing, Machine Shop, Foundry, and Patternmaking.‡ At the end of four years, the University invited him to stay, and the Navy consented to accept his resignation.

In 1904, he became Dean of the College of Engineering and in 1913 also of Architecture. His policy was conservative and thoughtful. He never adopted new measures rashly, but always weighed ideas carefully to discern their true value. Naturally his work has been constructive. He founded the colleges firmly and logically.

The Alumni always turned to his office to be greeted by a genial smile, a cigar, and a chat in one of those easy chairs which, with pictures, part of his famous Oriental rug collection, and the souvenirs of his travels, made the Dean's large paneled office a place of beauty.

†Once Dean Cooley made this statement in the hearing of Regent Murfin of the University; Murfin spoke up and said, "Professor, if you will change that word 'longer' to 'oftener,' we'll all believe you."

‡Compare this with the following, taken from the Aug. 14, 1937, edition of the Michigan Alumnus: "There is soon to be organized the MORTIMER E. COOLEY FOUNDATION OF ENGINEERING... A goal of five million dollars has been set for the Foundation, named for Michigan's grand old man of engineering, whose forty-seven years of service as teacher and Dean have made the University's College of Engineering known in every quarter of the world where engineers gather... [The Foundation will provide] funds to supplement the state support for the financing of salaries of eminent teachers and of facilities and equipment needed. This support will also make possible the granting of scholarships and fellowships."

Dean Cooley retired, in 1928, with the ultimate satisfaction of the University teacher warming the cockles of his heart: with the affection and loyalty of thousands of engineers, his pupils and his friends all over the world. He has a further satisfaction in the knowledge that he has left a definite impress upon the whole development of engineering education during the past fifty years.

For many years as a Consulting Engineer, particularly in the appraisal of properties of public service corporations, Dean Cooley played an important part in the development of industry in the state and in the nation at large. The list of corporations, municipalities, and governmental departments that he has served is a long and an impressive one. He was, from 1907 to 1912, Chairman of the Block Signal and Train Control Board of the Interstate Commerce Commission; he was a member of the Advisory Council of the Joint Commission on Postal Service. He has been called as an expert witness in innumerable important patent cases. His most recent notable valuation work was that of Neutral Arbitrator, by appointment of the Interstate Commerce Commission, in connection with the New York Central Railroad's purchase of the Michigan Central Railroad lines. Dean Cooley is, at eighty, still serving the Federal and State Governments. In August, 1933, he was appointed State Engineer [later State Director]† in charge of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works program for the State of Michigan. In this capacity he has added further laurels to an imposing record of service.

Among the distinctions that have come to Dean Cooley are the national Presidency of engineering societies, including The American Society of Mechanical Engineers, Federated American Engineering Societies (now the American Engineering Council), and others. He has also served as president of the common council of Ann Arbor, and in 1924 was Democratic candidate for the United States Senate. During the Spanish-American War, he again served in the Navy, as Chief Engineer of the U. S. S. Yosemite, which was manned largely by graduates of the University. During the World War he was Educational Director of the 7th District of Student Army Training Corps, which included the states of Michigan, Wisconsin, and Illinois.

Dean Cooley has been honored by various colleges, including the degree of Mechanical Engineer from the University of Michigan, 1895; L.L.D. from Michigan State College, 1907; Doctor of Engineering, University of Nebraska, 1911; Doctor of Science, Armour Institute of Technology, 1923; Doctor of Engineering,

University of Michigan, 1928†. In 1930 he was the recipient of The Washington Award given by the Western Society of Engineers upon the recommendation of all the national engineering societies, and generally conceded to be the outstanding recognition possible for an American engineer. This year (1935) he received a medal presented at a dinner at the Detroit Athletic Club on Lincoln's Birthday for fifty years of Service in The American Society of Mechanical Engineers.

During his lifetime, Cooley has been a strong advocate of conservation. From his experience, he saw that conservation and engineering were inter-related. It was this foresight that caused him to write and to campaign for conservation long before our more modern popular clamor for conservation was heard.

He has long been of the opinion that there should be a six-year course in engineering — two years of which would be devoted to cultural subjects. He has the feeling that the Engineering profession should require at least as much background and training as either Medicine or Law.

In 1919, the Department of Engineering Research was suggested. Dean Cooley was quick to see the benefits to be derived from cooperation between the University and the industrial and technical interests of the State along scientific lines. He helped make the advantages of this Department clear. Since its start, it has increased the staff of the College of Engineering by bringing leading engineers and scientists from all over the country. Laboratory facilities of the college have improved, and because of these very facts, it has greatly enhanced the opportunities for scientific study and research work on the part of undergraduate and graduate students.

A most remarkable tribute to the personality of Dean Cooley was paid at a Testimonial Dinner given him November 23, 1923, at the Hotel Statler in Detroit. Over five hundred former students and later friends gathered in Detroit. Among the guests were college presidents, deans, department heads; officers of railroads; bankers, attorneys, regents, presidents of national engineering societies, and friends dating from his earliest days at Michigan. Among the speakers was a former governor of Michigan, a Justice of the Supreme Court, and an Admiral of the United States Navy. Friends came from the Atlantic Coast, from west of the Mississippi, and from south of the Mason-Dixon Line, to pay their tribute of admiration and affection. Acting Mayor Lodge extended the welcome of the City of Detroit to the guests who had come to pay honor to one who had rendered many important services to Detroit and its citizens, and to the guest of honor he presented the freedom of the city. Dr. Ira N. Hollis, life-long friend of Dean Cooley, and then President of Worcester Polytechnic Institute, told innumerable stories of the Naval Academy days when, as he said, Dean Cooley always got by with his smile. Hollis had been graduated first in their Class of 1878 at the Naval Academy; Cooley was seventh.

†When he returned to his 60th Class Reunion at Annapolis in 1938, Cooley received his B. S. degree, authorized in 1936 to all graduates of the Naval Academy. Hollis Cooley¹¹ received his degree on graduation, in 1936; his father received his later, and his grandfather received his in 1938. This unique awarding of a degree sixty years "late" was commented upon by Ripley in his "Believe it or not" column.

Among other talks, P. N. Moore of St. Louis gave a brief outline of the work Dean Cooley had done as President of the Federated American Engineering Societies, an organization of over 50,000 engineers dedicated to the service of the community, the state, and the nation. Dean Cooley succeeded Herbert Hoover as National President of this organization.

In preparing this article about Dean Cooley, we join in the sentiment of the late President Burton (of the University of Michigan) who spoke at this Testimonial Dinner. He expressed the hopelessness of condensing the many years of service into ten minutes of talk, and in closing his remarks, said, "You didn't come here tonight because Dean Cooley is a scholar, or a teacher, or a great engineer, although he is all of those things, but because he is a human being, and you love him because he stands as a living illustration of what America means — unstifled, individual initiative."

Dean Cooley, through his long years of service, has come to be, in a very true sense, a representative of the whole University.†

†The following toast was given at the December 1937 meeting of the University of Michigan Club of New York, reported in the Jan. 29, 1938 issue of The Michigan Alumnus: "Presidents, Deans, athletic coaches, members of the faculty, and other guests, for the past 25 years and before, have spoken to us here in New York at annual banquets, monthly dinners, smokers, and luncheons. As lits, laws, engineers, medics, etc., we have had our favorites. But without any disrespect to all the others there is one universal favorite. We have missed him in recent years but we know that he is always with us in spirit. I give you that grand young man — our helpful guide, inspiring philosopher, and loyal friend — Mortimer E. Cooley."

His connections with the University cannot be explained merely by duties and responsibilities. His is an innate connection which can only be explained by love, and devotion to a task into which he flung all his energies.

The College of Engineering and the University of Michigan will stand forever as a living memorial to this man whose remarkable qualities caused even the older professors to label him "the best of the clan," and the hundreds of students whom he has known to speak of him always as "The Grand Old Man of Michigan."

*Catherine Chapin*² was da. of Deacon Samuel Chapin, one of the founders of Springfield, Mass. His wife was Ciceley St. Gaudens. A statue of him adorns the Library Park in Springfield and a replica of it is used on the south side of the public buildings of Philadelphia, where it is entitled "The Puritan." Catherine Chapin's third husband was Samuel Marshfield².

*Jedediah Dewey*⁶, b. May 15, 1777, Suffield; d. May 8, 1859, Manchester, Ontario Co. (formerly Farmington), N. Y.; m. Nov. 28, 1798, at Suffield, Conn., Anna Bement, da. Edmond and Mary (Sheldon), b. Jan. 22, 1780, Suffield, d. May 18, 1865, ae. 85, Manchester.

He and his wife Ann (Bement) removed to Manchester in 1799. During the month of February they came the whole distance with a yoke of oxen attached to a sled, driving two cows through the snow and bitter cold weather; when they arrived at Utica, N. Y., they found the road in bad shape; the letter H, which stood for highway, was cut on the trees by the roadside for the guidance of travelers. Their granddaughter, Anna Moseley Moore, relates that she remembered her grandmother, Ann Bement Dewey, telling that she had wondered what that "H" could stand for; in her mind it was associated with Hell. When they finally reached Clifton Springs, N. Y., Ann began to smell sulphur and said, "Well, Jedediah, I think we are most there; I begin to smell sulphur and brimstone." After suffering great privations traveling through the zero weather, during which one of the cows dropped a calf, they arrived safely at their destination, being thoroughly worn out by their journey. All they had in the world was their oxen, cows, calf, sled and household goods on the sled. They ran in debt for their land, which they paid for in after years. Jedediah had been out the year before and made a small clearing, sowed some wheat, and put up a log house. Their first child was born three months after they reached Manchester.

Jedediah Dewey left the place in a fine state of cultivation for his descendants. He died at the good old age of 82 and went to his reward in Heaven, having been a devout Baptist all his days. He was a man of great force of character; whatever he thought was right and undertook to do, he persevered in until he accomplished it if it was among the possibilities. He was rigid in his religious observance. He was a Baptist of the olden style, as were all the Dewey family. He told his son, Colonel Edmund Dewey, who became a Universalist, "Now, do not tell your children anything about it, for if you do you will ruin your whole family." He was a straight-out Whig in politics, and made himself felt wherever he went. He was a grand old man.

486 ERNEST LINWOOD COOLEY⁹

(*Albert Blake*⁸, *Lyman*⁷, *John II*⁶, *I*⁵, *Daniel III*⁴, *II*³, *I*², *Benjamin*¹), s. Albert Blake and Achsah Bennett (Griswold), No. 437, b. Dec. 8, 1856, Lyman Cooley homestead, Canandaigua, N. Y.; d. Aug. 4, 1928, at Cottonwoods, summer home of his brother, Mortimer E. Cooley, West Lake Shore Road, Canandaigua, bur. in the M. E. Cooley lot, Woodlawn Cemetery, Canandaigua. He was unmarried.

Ernest L. Cooley is one of the "trilogy" of brothers who became outstanding engineers of their day. Mortimer E. Cooley in Mechanical Engineering and Lyman E. and Ernest L. Cooley in civil and hydraulic engineering were all recognized as among the foremost engineers of the country. The compiler believes it to be a rarity in American families to have three brothers, of the same profession, simultaneously appearing in biographical dictionaries of men of achievement such as Who's Who in America, Engineering, etc.

Unlike his two eminent brothers in the engineering profession, Ernest L. Cooley was not university-trained. Ernest L. Cooley's early engineering work was in railroading in the middle west; later he was connected with Missouri and Mississippi River Commissions, was on the engineering staff of the city of Memphis, Tenn., and in 1895 became affiliated with the Sanitary District of Chicago, and continued with the District until his death. His work had to do with the hydraulic design of channels, sewers, dams, and special structures of the District. His design of the Bear Trap Dam, which controls the flow in the Chicago Drainage Canal, has been used in other projects in all parts of the world. At the Paris Exposition in 1900 he was awarded a medal for this design.

The engineering work conceived by Mr. Cooley always had originality in its design, and was carried out with careful consideration of future as well as present needs. His structures were always appreciated by the layman and admired by the engineer. His walls never cracked, his sewers never flooded.

Among the specific works of the Sanitary District of Chicago for which Ernest L. Cooley was solely responsible as to design, besides the Bear Trap Dam, were walls and embankments of the Main Channel Extension, the Stoney Sluice Gates, the movable dams at the Power House, Willow Springs Spillway, the Powerhouse Lock, the Summer Conduit, the Calumet-Sag Channel Controlling Works, the creek outfalls into the Calumet Channel, the North Shore Intercepting Sewer and the Evanston Intercepting Sewer. He gave advice in the design of the Lockport Power House.

Ernest Linwood Cooley was a member of the Adventurers' Club, the Press Club and the Isaac Walton League of Chicago. For many years he lived on Indiana Avenue in Chicago, in a flat the walls of which were lined with books and with his collections of fishing tackle.

No adaptation of a sketch in a scientific journal gives a picture of Ernest Linwood Cooley. He was a large, handsome man; his eyes twinkled, his pen slipped across pages recording smiles, interesting facts, imaginative ideas. He was a great scholar. There was, indeed, almost no branch of human knowledge into which his analytical mind had not delved. He was particularly interested in ancient books; his commentaries on early family names and derivations of names are unexcelled. He collected a small genealogical

His greatest single interest was, perhaps, angling. He collected examples of every known fly obtainable in this country and abroad, and these were arranged carefully for display. There were many hundreds of them. These, together with what has been called by authorities the greatest individual library on the subject of angling ever collected in this country, he left to his home-town library, the Wood Library of Canandaigua, N. Y. His collection of more than 7,000 volumes required special housing, which was provided by the late Judge Robert F. Thompson of Canandaigua.

Libraries, fishing, genealogical research, were only some of the interests of Ernest L. Cooley. He was a man of such varied interests, and such great capacities for exploring those interests, that there was almost nothing upon which he could not present some new viewpoint. He was a keen sportsman, and many happy times were shared by him and his brother, Mortimer E. Cooley, in the wilds of Canada, where, with local guides, they fished, hunted and sat beside campfires, sharing stories that no one in the world could tell better than these two.

LETTERS FROM ERNEST LINWOOD COOLEY (No. 486)

To his sister, Miss Emma T. Cooley, Canandaigua, N. Y.

Chicago, January 16, 1915

My dear Sister,

You ask for my photo. I never have deliberately sat for a photo by myself. Occasionally I have been caught in a group, and three or four times I have figured in a cartoon. I think I have saved one or two of the cartoons, and may be able to send you one. About the man who wants to know the ancestry of the Cooley family. . . .

Once upon a time I saw on a map of the Isle of Man a little place called Bally Cooley. There is another Bally Cooley in the north of Ireland near Londonderry. I have assumed the name of Cooley to be of Scotch origin, but Dr. Kiernan tells me the name is Cymric (Welsh). In the Century Book of Names, the name of the poet Abraham Cowley is pronounced Cooley. A great many proper names are place names; Cow, Cou, and Coo, stand for the plebeian Cow; leigh, lea, lee, lay, and ly, stand for field or enclosure; hence, a man who lived up by the cow pens or cow field, came to be known as Cowley or Cooley. The name Colley has been assumed to stand for a watch dog or faithful servant. Last spring I met an Irishman in the linen trade who told me that he knew quite a number of people named Cooley in the north of Ireland. Mortimer told me once that our Springfield ancestors probably came over from Rutlandshire, England.

In 1880 I saw in Lincoln, Nebraska, an old doctor named Cooley who looked very much like Uncle James† as I remember him. He told me his ancestors lived in Auburn, N. Y. About 1883 I saw in Kansas City a man named Benjamin Franklin Cooley, but did not learn his ancestry. Another Cooley ran a bedhouse in Kansas City. There is a place called Cooley Lake in the Missouri River Valley, 40 or 50 miles below Kansas City. About 1886 when I was on railroad work between Greenfield and Carlinville, Ill., where we crossed the Wabash Railroad at a new town called Hagaman Station, I ran across a "flannel mouthed Irishman" named Cooley — one of those "smart aleck" fellows who had to be funny on all occasions. In 1887, while on railroad work near Holton, Kansas, I ran across a tall English looking young farmer named Cooley, who was hard of hearing. He looked intelligent and respectable. There are 81 Cooleys in the Chicago City Directory, and 57 named in the telephone book, including some outlying towns.

William Desborough Cooley, F. R. G. S., who died in 1883, was a man of note. He wrote and edited several volumes on exploration, also a very good physical geography, besides a number of educational books on mathematics. Eight Cooleys are named in Allibone's Dictionary of Authors. Twenty years ago a civil engineer named George Cooley was a member of the Minneapolis Society of Engineers. Out in California another engineer named Cooley made a little talk on self-made men at the annual dinner of the local engineering society, in which he characterized the self-made man and the mule as the only animals God never had anything to do with. Evidently he had had experience with the self-made man. There are Cooleys scattered all over the United States, and when I go to Hell I expect to find the place paved with Cooleys and MacAdams. A prominent Chicago lawyer once assured a theological student that by all accounts Heaven had the best climate and Hell the best society. You can take your choice.

†James Smedley Cooley⁸, No. 438.

If I had made notes of all the Cooley stuff, I could have written a book which perhaps a hundred people would have cared to read. That noble ancestor stunt is of very general application. You may remember that Aunt Kate† had one in the Benson family. Em Nesbit used to tell about the Kings of Ireland the Nesbit family came down from. I have known personally at least 100 Irishmen who descended from a line of ancient Irish kings. There must be several millions of these descendants in the United States. Judging by popular report, the noble ancestor must have been too busy to sleep nights. It all goes to show that it pays to advertise. A considerable number of professional gentlemen in England are getting a living discovering ancestors for American families. Whenever you get pretty well acquainted with most anyone, he is liable to admit a noble ancestor at some unexpected moment.

It would be curious and perhaps interesting to get into communication with the West Springfield Cooley with a coat of arms. A letter of inquiry to the Postmaster or Town Clerk of West Springfield might locate him. Since he has collected a coat of arms, he also may have collected more or less genealogical data, though this does not necessarily follow.

Personally, I now occupy the position of the mule, who was without pride of ancestry or hope of posterity... "but that is another story..."

Sincerely,

E. L. Cooley

†Catherine T. Benson Cooley, 2nd wife of John B. Cooley⁸, No. 385.

To his brother, Mortimer E. Cooley⁹, Ann Arbor, Michigan

Chicago, February 27, 1920

Dear Brother:

Saturday evening I go on the Penn. Limited to New York on my way to South Norwalk, Conn., and later expect to go to Providence, R. I. My mission is to witness tests of certain Nash Hydro-Turbine Air Compressors under working pressures of 6-1/2 and 8-1/2 pounds, in connection with so-called standard orifices, and Venturi Air Meters. In my efforts to bone up on these subjects I find a plentiful lack of practical data for pressures ranging from 1 to 10 pounds.

— I have also located a copy of a little book.. strong on Fans with very good tables but it does not cover what I want in a general way, and has nothing on the Hydroturbine. If I do not find some specific data I will be placed in the position of taking what they hand me with perhaps not enough data to make an independent check... This thermodynamic subject is a fine thing to spring unawares on an elderly and somewhat rusty gent, who is not looking for trouble. The subject is more elusive than the study of Hydraulics, which is regarded as abstruse by some of the uninitiated.

Incidentally I have picked up another copy of Salisbury's Family Histories and Genealogies (about a cubic foot) which I will hand you the next time I see you.

Sincerely,
E. L. Cooley.

To Mr. S. H. Nahigian of Chicago, Ill., with whom Mortimer E. Cooley did considerable business in acquiring his well-known collection of Oriental rugs.

Chicago, May 19, 1926

Dear Sir,

About the Norwegian rug book of 100 color plates issued in 10 parts (1913-1922) referred to by Dean M. E. Cooley:

Two or three years ago I found the first 9 parts.. and got them for my brother. Last winter I got the 10th part, and mislaid it. Then I went back and got the last copy they had. I would be pleased to give you this extra copy in the name of my brother. It did not cost much. The first price was $3.50 a piece, but if not out of print the parts may be imported for half this rate, or perhaps less. It all depends on who has a copy for sale. It might be picked up as a bargain. While I collect books, I have not collected art works except to give away.

Sincerely,
E. L. Cooley

487 HORATIO SEYMOUR COOLEY⁹

(*Albert Blake*⁸, *Lyman*⁷, *John II*⁶, *I*⁵, *Daniel III*⁴, *II*³, *I*², *Benjamin*¹), s. Albert Blake and Achsah Bennett (Griswold), No. 437, b. Dec. 25, 1861, Lyman Cooley homestead, Canandaigua, N. Y.; d. Dec. 12, 1933, Niagara Falls, bur. July 23, 1934, in the M. E. Cooley lot, Woodlawn Cemetery, Canandaigua; m. Oct. 18, 1883, Carrie A. Townsend.

Seymour Cooley (he never used his other name, and was "Bub" to the family) was educated at Canandaigua Academy. On leaving school, he entered the Cooley Hardware Store, of which his oldest brother, Albert Eugene Cooley⁹, was then a partner. In 1892 he was elected Trustee of Canandaigua; was a member of the volunteer fire department. He was a charter member and organizer of the Canandaigua Lodge No. 245, Knights of Pythias; was a member of the Methodist Church.

In 1896 he moved to Niagara Falls, working with F. W. Oliver Co. on the Suspension Bridge. He came down with typhoid, and was dangerously ill for six months. Later he worked in a carriage shop, and graduated as a master coach painter. Eventually he became associated with Elderfield-Hartshorn Hardware Co., and was with this company until his death. He was an expert on hardware supplies, and an authority on paint; an article regarding his work was published in a national paint magazine.

Seymour Cooley was possessed of an endearing nature. He was quiet and reserved, but had a sparkling sense of humor. Once M. E. Cooley, his brother, sent Seymour a painting of the U. S. flag similar to the one over his own library mantel, telling him to hang it over the family altar, but Seymour replied that as they were short on family altars, he had hung it over the sewing machine.

(Paddock), b. Oct. 24, 1860, Seneca Castle, N. Y. She makes her home with her son, Dr. James Allen Cooley¹⁰.

Augustine S. Cooley lived his entire life in Canandaigua. Upon finishing his course at Canandaigua Academy, he engaged at once in the family hardware business, with which he was identified until his death, first as an assistant to his father, then as his partner, and then in partnership with his cousin, Albert Eugene Cooley⁹ (No. 482); and finally as the head of the firm which became A. S. Cooley & Co.

Mr. Cooley never held public office, but was a member of the village fire department for several years, one of the organizers of the Canandaigua Street Railroad Company, secretary of the Ontario County Agricultural Society, and a leader in the local mercantile world; and as a citizen, he earned an enviable reputation for enterprise and integrity. Of quiet and unassuming manner, he was a loyal friend and neighbor. He was a member of the Congregational church.

(For the ancestry of Frances (Murdock) Jennings, see unpublished articles by Miss Alice Jennings on the families of Moss, Hall, Rev. John Lathrop, Capt. John Stanley, Commissioner John Steele, Thomas Judd, Thomas Scott, Simon Stone, Isaac Stearns, William Gaylord, William Parker, John Pierce, Robert Royce (Rice), John Talcott, Edward Stebbins of Hartford and others.)

Frances Isadora (Murdock) Jennings was b. Jan. 23, 1838, Pomeroy, Ohio; d. July 30, 1881, bur. in the Oakland Cemetery, Atlanta, Ga. "She passed away at the early age of forty-two, leaving her five youngest children, as well as her eldest daughter, who needed her inexpressibly, motherless. She was a wonderful mother and home-maker, making the home a living one, and was one of the best and most generous of friends and neighbors. She was a relative whom her people wished to seek continually; she was, in fact, followed from the North to the South. With her constant toil, patient endurance, self-immolation, and her good, old-fashioned Methodist religion, she furnished the higher links of spiritual thought, and manifested the tenderness of God to her children."

William Griffith Jennings, who used in his later life only the name of William Jennings, grew up in Vermillion Co., Ill., in a pioneer country. He moved to Kentucky where he had relatives, became a lawyer, and made an early marriage to a young wife who died, leaving a small son, William Jennings. Eventually William Jennings the father settled in Georgia, buying farm lands, a dwelling-house and a mill near Ringgold, Catoosa Co. His property was burned during the Civil War and he moved to Atlanta, where he became a leading business man, dealing in real estate and insurance, later having a business of building-materials, hardware and other architectural supplies. His home place in Atlanta was four acres fronting on Jackson Street, bounded on each side by Rice and Currier streets, and in the rear by the road which became the boulevard. The house, a large white one, stood on a hill and was surrounded by large oak trees. This place, under Mr. Jennings' supervision, became one of the show-places of Atlanta, and was particularly noted for its fruit trees of almost tropical luxuriance. About 1880, Mr. Jennings bought a plantation in Calhoun Co., Ga., and about 1882 removed to Thomasville, where he went into the nursery business, and where he died in 1899.

There were twelve children by his second marriage: Alice, Julia, Georgiana (Anna), Charles Albert, Fannie, Addison Harris, Edwin Murdock, Frank, Frederick B., Nellie R., Solon Ralph and Eva Lulu. The eldest of these children, several of whom did not live beyond childhood, was Miss Alice Jennings, who has prepared a number of papers on her ancestors. From one of these, called Cooley to Jennings Ancestry (unpublished), this material is quoted or adapted. Miss Jennings is a charter member of The Cooley Family Association, and attended the first meeting in Springfield, Mass., in 1936. She is an author of considerable reputation, and has also done much painting. She took charge of her motherless sisters and brothers on her mother's death, and devoted her early life to their care. Miss Alice Jennings resides (1939) in Concord, N. H.

541 DEACON LEVI COOLEY⁶

 George II and Abi (Jones), No. 533.

According to a memorandum taken by M. E. Cooley in Granville, Mass., in 1885, George Cooley, "not related to the other Cooleys in Granville" (who were mostly descendants of Daniel Cooley I²), had: Deacon Levi, a farmer who lived in Granville; George, who "went West and was a Mason by trade"; Noah, a merchant in West Granville, who had a son named Francis (a banker in Hartford), and other children. This memorandum coincides with the known facts regarding George III and Noah, sons of George II, and is the only clue to the identity of "Deacon Levi Cooley," who lived in Granville and whose records are found in the Granville Vital and Cemetery Records. In the old Granville cemetery, a group of Cooley graves includes Hannah, da. Capt. Richard and Rebekah Dickinson, and Loudon, son of Capt. Richard and Mrs. Rebekah Dickinson. The inference is that Capt. Richard and Rebekah Dickinson were the parents of Rebekah Dickinson who married Deacon Levi Cooley. In this same group of graves are Rebekah Cooley, Lt. Levi Cooley, son of Deacon Levi Cooley, Rebekah, wife of Deacon Levi; and Abi, relict of George, Capt. George and Harriet, da. George Cooley (thus indicating a close relationship between Capt. George and Abi (Jones) Cooley and Deacon Levi Cooley); also Mirilla Cooley, Melissa Cooley, and other children of Deacon Levi and Rebekah (Dickinson) Cooley. Until further information can be obtained, it may be assumed that Deacon Levi Cooley was the son of George II and Abi (Jones) Cooley, No. 533. The date and place of his birth and death are not known; neither is recorded in the vital statistics of Somers, Conn., or of Granville.

Levi Cooley m. (1) Nov. 7, 1795, Granville, Rebecca Dickinson, d. Aug. 16, 1809, ae. 34, in childbed; he m. (2) (int.) Dec. 24, 1811, Granville, Elizabeth Adams of Otis, Hampshire Co., Mass. (Granville Vital Records). Apparently Deacon Levi Cooley left Granville after his second marriage. No births of children are recorded in Granville, but deaths are recorded. No members of his family by his first wife survived the spotted fever epidemic of 1812, except Levi S. who d. aged 26, prob. unm. Deacon Levi Cooley prob. had other children by his second marriage.†

ALANSON COOLEY†

to the Benjamin Cooley¹ descendants, was b. Jan. 16, 1798, probably in Somers, Conn., although no record of his birth can be found. He d. May 7, 1880, near Batavia, Ill. He m. (1) in Cornwall, Addison Co., Vt., Mary Atwood, b. Oct. 19, 1798, Rutland, Vt., d. July 13, 1839, Chardon, Geauga Co., Ohio, when her youngest son, Samuel Franklyn Cooley, was about a month old. She is buried in the old Munson-Chardon Cemetery in an unmarked grave.

An Alanson m. (2) about 1840 Mahala Ashcraft or Ashcroft, of whom nothing is known. Her name is also given Mahala Beechey.

This Alanson was prob. the son of Joseph W., of this Appendix.

If Alanson, Sr., was born in Somers (or at Somerset, Vt.), and at some time moved to Vermont where he married Mary Atwood, they later on removed to Wilbraham, Mass., for Melbert E. Cooley (No. 29) says the family left Wilbraham via the old covered bridge over the Connecticut River at Springfield, and traveled the Erie Canal and the Great Lakes to Fairport, the harbor for Painesville, Ohio. Melbert Cooley has heard his father and uncles tell about this trip, made in 1835.

Alanson Cooley bought land and built a cabin on the line between Munson and Chardon; it depended on which end of the house a child was born in as to whether it was born in Munson or Chardon.

Alanson Cooley was a farmer, and also made wagons, spinning-wheels, chairs, baskets, etc. After the death of his first wife, he married again and had four children. At an unknown date he removed to Illinois, taking his four youngest children and some of the children by his first marriage. Thus the children of the first marriage lost touch with him, and with their half-brothers and half-sisters. The place in Illinois where he settled is not known; prob. near Batavia.

BENJAMIN

(Taken from History of the Cooley Family, by Jerome E. Cooley, Duluth, Minn., 1916. This booklet was loaned by and returned to Leon W. Cooley, Duluth, in 1933. The records have been supplemented by correspondence with members of the family, who have checked the material.)

In Recollections of Early Days in Duluth, by Jerome Eugene Cooley (No. 18 below), published in Duluth in 1925, a biographical sketch concerning the author, signed H. W. P., contains the following references to Benjamin Cooley, the first-known ancestor of this family.

Jerome Eugene Cooley is of English descent. His great-great-grandfather arrived in Massachusetts from England in the year 1690. Mr. Cooley's grandfather, Benjamin Cooley, deserves a word, since he shows the sort of block from which our historian was chipped. Benjamin Cooley was born in Massachusetts, but moved to the vicinity of Albany when that capital city and political pool marked the outskirts of civilization.

The early years of Benjamin Cooley's life were passed in true pioneer fashion. For those were the times when men learned by doing, and while doing. Misfortune was sure to get any laggard that didn't hustle.

The grandfather of Duluth's historian hustled so well that when later he engaged in lumbering on the Susquehanna River, in Delaware County, he became a man of wealth. The village of Cooley in Sullivan County, N. Y., commemorates the historian's grandpaternal name. Perhaps the grandfather himself?

When, in 1816, Benjamin Cooley moved to the western part of New York, he was the richest man in that part of the country. He had fourteen hundred dollars spot cash — the spot being the hip pocket, the most popular bank in those days.

With this vast sum, Uncle Ben Cooley bought a farm and built a sawmill, which illustrates how much a dollar could do a hundred years ago. Products of mill and farm were taken 'down north' to Castile, Mt. Morris, Genesco, Mosco, and other towns in northeastern New York.

The pioneer's family eventually numbered seven — two girls and five boys. In 1916 the descendants of this hardy New Yorker celebrated the centenary of his westward migration from Delaware County to Al-legmany County. For the anniversary, Duluth's historian furnished a genealogical record of the family of Alfred Cooley, the third child in Benjamin's flock (History of the Cooley Family, 1916).

BENJAMIN COOLEY

b. Sept. 14, 1778, Becket, Mass. (History of the Cooley Family; his birth is not found in Becket or Berkshire Co. records, thus far). He was one of at least five children; Thursey, who m. Daniel Peck, Rumor, Elijah, and a daughter who was massacred in an Indian raid (History of the Cooley Family). It is the belief of the compiler that Benjamin Cooley was a brother of Gideon Cooley, b. about 1780, whose records are found in this Appendix.

Benjamin Cooley¹ m. May 6, 1802, Relief Landers, b. Jan. 5, 1786, Lenox (Berkshire Co.), Mass. She was a sister of Desire Landers who m. Gideon Cooley; for their ancestry, see the Landers lineage given in the record of the descendants of Gideon Cooley in this Appendix.

Benjamin Cooley probably died about 1864/5, bur. Elmer Cemetery, near Wiscoy, N. Y.

18 JEROME E. COOLEY³

s. Alfred, No. 5 above, b. Oct. 26, 1844, Wiscoy, Alleghany Co., N. Y.; d. May 24, 1927, Las Vegas, Nev.; m. May 10, 1870, Minneapolis, Minn., Ella M. Barrows, b. near Stowe, Vt., d. Mar. 1931, Duluth, Minn., da. Daniel and Luca.

The following sketch is taken from the biographical preface of Jerome E. Cooley's Recollections of Early Days in Duluth.

His name hints a Bonapartist leaning somewhere. His education was of the famous little red schoolhouse brand, topped off with work at the seminary in the village of Pike, Wyoming County, N. Y. Young Jerome was evidently a great admirer of his hustling grandfather (Benjamin Cooley, b. 1778), as he followed that ancestor's example in many details.

In 1865 he celebrated his majority by leaving home to start pioneering on his own account in the "far West." His first stop was Minneapolis, where he promptly engaged in the lumber business. After three years of Twin City life, he started toward the Twin Ports with a stop-over at Hinckley of about two and one-half years. While yet a citizen of Hinckley, the young bustling sawmill operator of twenty-six found time to follow his heart back to Minneapolis, where on May 12, 1870, he entrusted it to the permanent keeping of Miss Ella M. Barrows.

He next moved about thirty-five miles nearer Duluth, and started a new town. He first cleared the land of jack pine and blueberry bushes, dammed the Grindstone River, built a residence for himself, and a boarding-house for his employees, of lumber imported from Hinckley, and at last got a sawmill erected which employed twenty-five men.

Discussing a name for the new village, the men suggested Cooley, but in a week or so came word from St. Paul that the railroad had christened the infant village in honor of George Barnum, paymaster of the road. The Barnum mill furnished some lumber for the dike in Duluth Bay.

In the spring of 1873 Mr. Cooley moved to Duluth. Here he has remained, surviving the northeasters and hill-climbing of over fifty years' continuous residence. His memories of Duluth begin in 1871, while he was still a resident of Hinckley. On July 4th of that year he made an excursion to Duluth to celebrate with other patriotic young bloods of the lake region. It is said that his life-long palship with John Perkins (Perky) Johnson began on that festive date. Perhaps Mr. Cooley ran up to Duluth to pay tribute to the fame of these outstanding facts: The number of vessels arriving in port that year was 158! The population was 3,131, of whom 1,865 were foreigners! When Mr. Cooley moved his family to Duluth, almost three years later (1873), the population promptly jumped to over 5,000, lake tonnage more than doubled because he had gone into the fish business, and a blast furnace, thriving on hot air, started operation in November 1873, boasting an annual production of 6500 tons!

So, ever since his removal to Duluth, Mr. Cooley has been identified with the city's development and growth. His civic services have been many. When Duluth was endeavoring to compromise her bonded debt in 1879, he was elected city treasurer, and did what he could to help the struggling metropolis to get on her financial feet. In 1889 he was elected city assessor and served seven years. Governor McGill appointed him a member of the State Board of Equalization, an office he held for twenty-one years, from 1891 to 1912. He adopted the politics of his ancestors and voted Republican, as one gathers from his several little friendly gibes at his opponents.

He joined the Masonic order in 1879, and has held many important positions in the various bodies. He has been Master of Palestine Lodge No. 79, Master of Duluth Council No. 4, Grand High Priest of the Royal Arch Chapter, Grand Master of the Council of State and General Grand Master of the Council for Minnesota. He was secretary of the Scottish Rite bodies for twenty-one years. He is a 33rd degree Mason in the Scottish Rite, the highest attainable, which makes him a member of the Supreme Council at Washington, D. C.

The Old Settlers' Association, The St. Louis County Historical Society, the Chamber of Commerce, and the First Methodist Episcopal Church, all carry him on their roster of members.

DANIEL DENTON

DANIEL DENTON COOLEY

Realtor. Prominent in the development of Houston, Texas, the late Daniel Denton Cooley was for over forty years a leader in civic affairs and an active layman in the councils of the Protestant Episcopal Church. Mr. Cooley was born in Binghamton, N. Y., April 15, 1850, son of Robert William and Eliza Maria (Stone) Cooley, and was a descendant of Benjamin Cooley, who came to America from England among the early settlers and was one of the co-founders of Springfield, Mass., in 1636. Mr. Cooley was educated in the public schools and business college at Binghamton, and in early manhood went West, locating at Ashland, Nebr. There he engaged in mercantile business for some years, after which he became cashier of the First National Bank of Ashland. He held this position until 1887, when, having become interested in Texas development, he and O. M. Carter, President of the Bank, organized the Omaha and South Texas Land Company, and Mr. Cooley removed to Houston as treasurer and general manager of the company. Here he centered his activities in the development of the Houston Heights section, then a large wood tract several miles from the heart of the city, but now one of Houston's most desirable residential districts. Here he built a fine home, erected the first school, and brought to a successful conclusion one of the largest real estate developments in the country, comprising about twenty-four hundred acres. After the completion of this project, Mr. Cooley was for a time engaged in general real estate business. He was also actively identified with the South Texas National Bank, and was associated with the late H. G. MacGregor in the operation of the Houston Electric Street Railroad Company.

About 1903 Mr. Cooley became a member of the insurance firm of Childress & Taylor, which was later renamed Cooley, Schweikart, & Seaman, and continued as the head of this firm until his death.

As president of the State Land Oil Company, which put down the first well in the bay, Mr. Cooley was a pioneer in oil production in the Goose Creek district. He also owned rice farms at Eagle Lake and Alief, Texas, and oil interests in Louisiana. His hobbies were pecan growing and the collection of rare coins. He was one of the first in Houston to graft paper shell pecans, and his home place on Heights Blvd. contains several fine trees of his own planting. Mr. Cooley was known as the "Father of Houston Heights," and at the time of his death was the largest property owner in that district.

Aside from his business activities, Mr. Cooley always took a keen interest in civic affairs, and for many years served on the board of the Heights Schools. The original school, which he built out of his own funds, has been added to from time to time until it has become one of the finest in the city, and some years ago was named the Cooley school in his honor. He was chairman of the joint city and county committee which erected the Jefferson Davis Hospital, and was also chairman of the insurance committee of the Diocese of Texas of the Protestant Episcopal Church. A lifelong Episcopalian, he was a vestryman of Christ Church, and later was one of the founders of Saint Andrew's Episcopal Church, where he served as vestryman until a few months before his death, when he resigned and was made honorary senior warden. Mr. Cooley was a 32nd degree Mason and the second oldest Shriner in the State. He was a member of Reagon Lodge, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, past commander of Ruthven Commandry, Royal Arch Masons, and member of Arabia Temple, Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of the Mystic Shrine.

On Oct. 12, 1882, Mr. Cooley married Helen Grace Winfield, a native of Md., who had come to Neb. with her parents several years before her marriage. For many years she was a leader in civic, social and philanthropic circles of the Heights. She donated the site for the Heights Women's Club, on which was erected the first woman's club house in the State. She died June 13, 1916. Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Cooley: 1. Denton W., pres. of the Marine Bank & Trust Co., who was killed in an auto accident, June 9, 1928. He married Victoria A. Locke, Houston, and had one da., Dorothy Val, who died at the age of 3 years. 2. Arthur W., member of the firm of Cooley, Schweikhart, & Seaman, who married Amine Welling of Niles, Mich. 3. Dr. Ralph C., of Houston, who married Mary Fraley, and has two sons, Ralph C., Jr., and Denton Arthur.

Mr. Cooley died in his home in Houston, Nov. 22, 1933, after a brief illness. His passing was mourned by a host of friends, and social and business associates throughout the country paid tribute to his character and achievement. From: Encyclopedia of Am. Biography. [Based upon records compiled and checked by Mrs. Beulah D. Reed (No. 48 below), of Anoka, Minn., who has spent many years of research in an effort, so far unsuccessful, to establish the ancestry of Gideon Cooley, who seems obviously to be a descendant of Benjamin Cooley¹ the Immigrant.]

b. about 1780, date and place unknown, parentage unknown; prob. the brother of Benjamin Cooley, b. 1778, of this Appendix, whose birthplace is given as Becket, Mass., though no record of birth can be found. Since these two Cooleys married sisters, of a family which lived in Lenox, Berkshire Co., Mass., for a while, it is reasonable to believe that the Cooleys also resided in Berkshire Co. for a time. (The birth place as given for Benjamin Cooley is from an entirely independent source, as no connection between Benjamin and Gideon Cooley was assumed, and the Landers lineage of Benjamin Cooley's wife was not known.)

†Osborn Benjamin Cooley, when about 21 years old, stopped in Utah on his way to California and was converted to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, commonly called Mormons. At that time about 2% of the members of the church practised polygamy (which was discontinued in 1890). In Utah, and within the Church, second wives were considered legal if married before Oct. 6, 1890. Those who continued to live with two wives moved away from Utah, however, and it was while Osborn Benjamin Cooley was removing to Mexico with his children and his two wives, that Charles Herman and Ada Cooley were born, in 1893, at Mesa, Maricopa Co., Ariz.

JOHN COOLEY, B. 1749

(Based upon records supplied by Miss Sara Cooley (No. 108 below), Trenton, N. J., and compiled by her from several Cooley Bibles, Records of St. Thomas P.E. Church of Kingwood and the Christian Church of Milford, N. J., Tombstones in Milford cemeteries, Marriage Records of Hunterdon and Warren Counties, Hunterdon County Deeds, New Jersey Vital Statistics, and information from present-day members of the family.)

By family tradition the Cooleys of Hunterdon County, N. J., were descended from Benjamin Cooley of Springfield, Mass., but no records have been found to prove this, nor to furnish definite information as to their previous residence. The earliest record of the name in the county is dated February 18, 1757, and is the grant by Gov. Jonathan Belcher of Letters of Administration to Mary Cooley, Administrator of the estate of James Cooley, deceased, of Bethlehem. It is probable that James and Mary were the parents of John Cooley.

JOHN W., Rev.

REV. JOHN W. COOLEY

Minister of Zion Tabernacle, Methodist church, Hamilton, was born in Toronto township, county of Peel, Ontario, on the 7th of November, 1852. His parents were Thomas and Ann Cooley. The former was born on one of the Channel islands, where his father, a British soldier, was stationed about the date of the battle of Waterloo. He was brought up near Belfast. His mother was a native of Fermanagh, Ireland, and the family emigrated to Canada early in her life. Mr. Cooley, senior, was for many years a missionary agent of the American Tract Society, among the sailors on the Welland Canal, and was one of the most active agents in securing the closing of the canal against Sunday traffic. Rev. Mr. Cooley, the subject of our sketch, received his education chiefly in the public and high schools in Thorold, under Rev. John McNeeley, M. A.; Brampton High School, under John Seath, B. A., now High School inspector; and in the Galt Collegiate Institute, under the principalship of the late William Tassie, LL. D. In 1869 he became a public school teacher in the Central School, Owen Sound. For five years he continued in the profession, in different places, meanwhile prosecuting his studies privately and taking an examination for teacher's certificate each year. In the year 1873 he was appointed teacher of the Senior Boys' School, Guelph. During this year his religious conversion took place, and he became active in the work of the Methodist church and the Guelph Young Men's Christian Association, of which he was secretary. At the beginning of the year 1874, at the request of the chairman of the district, coupled with his own convictions, he accepted an appointment as junior preacher on the Elora circuit of the Methodist church. His subsequent appointments were, 1874-75, Listowel; 1876, Hamilton, Hannah Street church; and in 1877, Stratford. In 1878 he was ordained and stationed at Elmira, county Waterloo. Toward the end of his three year term a throat affection compelled his temporary retirement from the work of the ministry. The greater part of the next two years (1881-82) was spent in newspaper work, as a member of the editorial staff of the Winnipeg Free Press. In October, 1882, on his complete restoration to health, he resumed his ministerial work, being appointed to Jerseyville circuit near Brantford. Three years were spent there. In 1885 he was appointed to Dunnville, and in 1887 to the pastorate of Zion Tabernacle, Hamilton, where he now is. In August, 1878, he was married to Emily H. Keeling, of Guelph, daughter of the late George M. Keeling, the founder of the Guelph Mercury, who died in 1861. This lady was a highly gifted musician, organist for many years, and subsequently the choir leader as well of the Norfolk Street Methodist church, Guelph. She was a very popular vocalist, and was widely esteemed for her amiability, good judgment, and energy in social and church work. She died in April, 1885, leaving two children, one of whom alone is now living. Rev. Mr. Cooley is a very active and pronounced temperance advocate and prohibitionist and takes a deep interest in all other social movements. JUSTUS

JUSTUS COOLEY, B. 1767

In a lineage (shown in italics) taken from the Encyclopedia of American Biography, Am. Hist. Soc. Inc., 1934, Vol. I, Justus Cooley is given as the son of Nathan Cooley, b. 1746 (Family No. 218), who was the son of Luke Cooley, b. 1718 (Family No. 210). This appears to be in error. Justus Cooley, b. 1767, more probably belongs to the family referred to in the footnote for Gideon Cooley, b. 1739 (Family No. 215).

The material given here is taken from three sources: that in italics is from the lineage referred to above; the other material is taken from a letter of Aug. 4, 1939, to M. E. Cooley from Miss Katherine Hartman Cooley, No. 20 below, of Groveland, N. Y., in reply to a request for data; and from a letter of Oct. 11, 1939, to Mrs. J. W. Keatley, from Miss Alice M. Cooley, No. 11 below, of Brooklyn, N. Y., who made additions and corrections to the other records.

PART III

Acknowledgments, Bibliography, and Indexes

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS*

While acknowledgment of every individual contribution to the Cooley genealogy of items, lineages and data, would, of necessity, be impracticable, this book is the compilation of records which have come into the hands of Mortimer E. Cooley over a period exceeding fifty years. Among the many who sent in records which have been incorporated in this book, there are some who have shown such interest, and who have contributed so much material, that a special acknowledgment of their assistance seems only fair. The following is a list of those persons.

It is the hope of this compiler that no one whose name should be included in this list has been omitted. It is certain that the individuals mentioned below have made this genealogy possible through the completeness of records they sent in, and through continued interest. Their assistance and cooperation is hereby gratefully acknowledged.

Chapter IV

Early Springfield and Longmeadow, Mass., by Harry Andrew Wright

American Antiquarian Society. Worcester, Mass. Original manuscripts.

Book of Possessions, Springfield, Mass. A part of the records of the town of Springfield. In it all individual land holdings were supposedly recorded. While at times it is found to be exasperatingly lacking, yet as a whole it is surprisingly complete. Without it, the location of few of the early grants could be determined. Original manuscript.

Burt, Henry M. The first century of the history of Springfield. The official records from 1636 to 1732. 2 vols. Springfield, Mass., 1898. A transcription of the records of the town which should be used only as a short-cut, and compared with the original records to insure accuracy. The personal-name index is fairly complete; the subject index is grossly inadequate.

Connecticut Valley Historical Society. Springfield, Mass. Original manuscripts.

Genesis of Springfield. See Wright, below.

Hampden County Registry of Deeds, Springfield, Mass. On May 7, 1662, the towns of Springfield, Northampton and Hadley were constituted a county called Hampshire. Although containing within its limits but three towns, it included all of Western Massachusetts. The first division was made July 10, 1731, when Worcester County was organized. June 30, 1761, Berkshire County was set off, and on June 24, 1811, Franklin County came into being. The last division of old Hampshire County was made February 20, 1812, when the present Hampden County was set off. With this division, provision was made that Hampshire County should retain all of the

- probate and court records, and that the real estate records should go to Hampden County. Thus, all of the Probate and Court records prior to Feb. 20, 1812, are now at Northampton and the real estate records are at Springfield. These are not the original documents, but are contemporary recorded copies.

- Letter of Instruction, April 17, 1629.* The "first general letter of instruction from the Governor and Deputy of the New England Company for a Plantation in Massachusetts Bay, to the Governor and Council for London's Plantation in the Massachusetts Bay in New England," written from Gravesend April 17, 1629, is in the Massachusetts Archives in the State House in Boston. William Pynchon was an assistant (i.e., one of the Board of Governors) and must perforce have been conversant with it.
- Longmeadow centennial. Proceedings at the centennial celebration of the town of Longmeadow. Hartford, Conn., 1884. Wholly unindexed. Appendices include recollections of oldest inhabitants; these are of doubtful value and should be used with caution.

Massachusetts Archives. State House, Boston, Mass. Original manuscripts and maps.

Massachusetts Colony Records. See Records of the Governor and Company of the Massachusetts Bay.

Massachusetts Historical Society Collections and Proceedings. Collections: Series I, II, III, IV, V, VI, of ten volumes each, Series VII, of which there are to date six volumes. Proceedings: Series I and II, twenty volumes each, Series III, one volume to date. Published at Boston, Mass., at various dates.

Pyncheon Account Books. Original manuscript. The volume containing the period of approximately 1645-1650 is in the Forbes Library, Northampton, Mass.; the ones covering 1650-1700 are with the Connecticut Valley Historical Society, Springfield, Mass. Collectively, these books include transactions with practically every inhabitant of Springfield for more than half a century.
